C. F. Palmer Named U. S. Co-ordinator Of Defense Housing

Atlantan Is Called to Washington To Help National Program; Marion Smith Heads Atlanta Authority.

Charles F. Palmer, real estate developer, planning expert and chairman of the Atlanta Housing Authority, was appointed yesterday as housing co-ordinator by the National Defense Advisory Commission. He will go to Washington today to take up his duties "for the duration of the emergency."

Mr. Palmer resigned as head of the local housing body, but is not otherwise severing his Atlanta connections. His membership in the authority was given to Marion Smith by Mayor Hartsfield. A new chairman will be elected at a meeting Tuesday. J. E. Atkinson, secretary of Palmer, Inc., building operators, will take over his duties with that company.

For Emergency.

"The duty of the co-ordinator and his staff, as outlined to me," said Palmer, "is to see that sufficient housing, private preferably, but if not, then public, is made available to meet emergency needs with such dispatch that national defense does not suffer."

He explained that factories might be located for strategic reasons at points where there was no housing, thus necessitating rapid action, while, in many existing situations, expanded industrial operations make more housing an immediately pressing need. "The job is to supplement, not to supplant, any existing agency or service," he emphasized. "It is for the period of the emergency only."

Use Private Capital.

"General principles have been outlined by unanimous and friendly action of the central housing committee which includes the heads of all federal departments directly affected. The defense commission concurs."

"In doing the job, one primary objective will be to encourage the use of private capital. It is believed adequate safeguards can be added to the many already provided, and that even during these uncertain times it will be good business for private capital to handle the requirements in most instances. Where it is not available, fails to respond, or finds it impracticable to act with the promptness required by the emergency, then the government will have to do the job."

He will operate under the general direction of William F. Knudsen and Edwin R. Stettinius.

Holds Many Posts.

Mrs. Palmer and their younger daughters, Laura and Jeanette, will join him in Washington in August. Another daughter, Mrs. Earl Cecil Moses Jr., a recent bride, was selected as "Scarlet O'Hara" in the "Gone With the Wind" event of The Constitution and the Atlanta Junior League. Palmer is president of the National Association of Housing Officials; former president of the National Association of Building Owners and Managers, former president of Southern Conference of Building Owners and Managers, member of the Atlanta and National Association of Real Estate Boards, former president of the

Soap Box Race Finals Will Be Held Saturday

4,000 Grandstand Seats
To Be Erected at Track Site.

"Johnny, come up out of that basement!"

"Aw, gee, Mom, I'm busy—"

And busy is the word as scores of "Johnnies" all over town—those intrepid lads between the ages of 11 and 15—work like intent beavers at the great task of putting finishing touches on their trim little coaster cars.

For the heat of excitement is really on. It's Soap Box Derby time, and the big race is less than a week away. The big race is set for this coming Saturday.

Officials announced yesterday that all plans for the Atlanta and north Georgia championship races have been completed, and that several new features have been added for the entertainment of those thousands who will witness the races out on Northside drive, just beyond Fourteenth street.

Many safety measures have been taken, the officials said, and this year's event is expected to be run off in record time.

A four-foot-high wire fence will be erected along the entire race course, and arrangements have been made for 4,000 grandstand seats. These seats will be placed on the shady side of the drive, right at that all-important finish line.

Members of Gate City Post No. 72, American Legion, will be in charge of the seats, and will also share in the proceeds of all concessions, for the benefit of the boy band the post is sponsoring.

Other features of this year's race will be:

1. A parade of the drivers, who will assemble at 1:45 o'clock Saturday afternoon and march up the hill to the starting line.
2. A flag-raising ceremony pre-

L. & N. Fast Freight Going 50 Miles Hour Hits Switch Engine

2 Engineers Perish; Spectators, Crowding Closely, Showered With Blazing Gasoline; Rescue Workers Hurt.

Special to THE CONSTITUTION.

CARTERSVILLE, Ga., July 20.—Two engineers were killed here in a spectacular and terrific collision between a fast freight of the L. & N. and an N. C. & St. L. switch engine at about 4 o'clock this afternoon.

Forty minutes after the crash, two oil tank cars of the freight exploded and blazing gasoline showered on at least 100 spectators and rescue workers. Several were seriously burned. Others were blistered by the intense heat.

Railroad officials said the crash occurred when the switch engine backed onto the main track, directly into the path of the freight which was going 50 miles an hour.

This little community was thrown into confusion as the scores of burned persons were rushed to the two hospitals, while drugstores and homes were pressed into emergency first-aid service.

Clouds of Dense Smoke.
Thick, black clouds of dense smoke from the burning wreckage rose high into the air, leading persons in nearby towns to believe a great fire was raging in Cartersville itself.

Bodies of the victims were taken from the demolished locomotives several hours after the collision.

The wreck occurred on tracks of the N. C. & St. L. about 15 yards from widely traveled route No. 41 and hundreds of sightseers' automobiles choked the highway.

The dead were J. O. Greenwell of Bowling Green, Ky., engineer of the freight, and L. L. Gilstrap of Cartersville, engineer of the switch engine.

Greenwell's last thought was for his train crew.

Fireman S. D. Ross and Brake man E. V. Swann, neither of whom was hurt, said that as he saw the switch engine back onto the main line, he yelled to them "Crash! Jump!"

Then Greenwell plunged from the cab.

They leaped from the cab to the coal tender, which turned over slowly as the impact came, dumping them to the ground, unhurt.

Pinned Beneath Car.

Greenwell's leap evidently caused his death. His body was found beneath a derailed freight car which had apparently toppled upon him as he lay upon the ground. It was three hours after the crash that rescue workers, beaten back by flames, were able to reach his body.

Gilstrap's body was crushed in the wreckage of his cab, and had to be cut free from the twisted steel with acetylene torches.

The bodies of the victims were taken to the Owen Funeral Home here.

Two members of his train crew staggered from the wreckage bruised, cut and suffering from confusions. They were taken to Stanford hospital. They are J. W. Keyes and W. D. Harris, both fire men. Doctors said both would recover.

The noise of the crash, "like the

Hitler's 'Peace' Bombers Raid Britain Again

Nazis Lose 12 Planes in Battles; Berlin Begg,
'Oust Churchill.'

By The Associated Press.
The prelude to the Battle of the British Isles apparently was nearing its end last night.

Adolf Hitler has presented Germany's last offer—the British must accept Nazi peace terms or face what he says will be destruction.

And the British have answered. Heedless of the Fuehrer's "peace offensive," they have rejuvenated their army command and even while Nazi bombs burst from coast to coast, begun thinking of carrying the fight back to the German-mastered continent with an army of 4,000,000 men.

'Oust Churchill.'

Radio transmitters dinned Hitler's "last appeal to reason" into English ears until, as authorized Berlin sources put it, every Englishman knows exactly what is in store for him unless he gets rid of "the plutocratic ruling clique" which wants to keep on fighting.

Repeatedly the English were told that Hitler has no desire to harm either England or her empire. It was suggested that only by getting out from under Churchill's control can England escape the German onslaught.

Twice squadrons of Nazi bombers descended on the southeast English ports to empty their bomb racks toward strings of British merchantmen.

Twelve German planes were reported officially shot down and at least four others were believed to have been bagged in a fierce sky fight which developed when British defense planes intercepted a German fighter-escorted bombing squadron over a south-east port.

British fliers, the air ministry disclosed, retaliated with night bombing attacks Friday against naval and air bases in Germany and Holland and on Nazi aircraft factories, oil reserves and communications.

Harvests Way Off.

With the war apparently turning toward a new, critical phase and Germany tightening her "starvation blockade" on Britain, another winter of hardship in Europe seemed increasingly likely.

A wheat forecast in Bucharest anticipated a Rumanian harvest of 1,630,000 metric tons compared to a normal yearly average of about 5,000,000.

The Rumanian situation reflected poor prospects throughout southeastern Europe and the probability of throttled exports, especially to Germany. Yugoslavia, usually an exporter, it was said, will have to import grain for her own needs and Hungary already has taken steps to assure wheat for her own people.

Hull Secretive as Americas Seek Defense, Economic Plan

HAVANA, July 20.—(P)—The United States delegation became the center of intense activity tonight in informal conversations aimed at formulating proposals on hemisphere defense and economy at the second meeting of American foreign ministers opening here tomorrow.

The arrival of Secretary of State Hull, with his staff of diplomatic, trade, monetary and agricultural advisers, opened preliminary consultations in which officials of the other American republics sought first to hear details of the United States proposals.

Hull, however, adopted the role of a "listener" to get a clear picture of the problems facing each of the other countries, before disclosing just how the United States proposes to help them.

Absent from these preliminary talks was the Argentine delegation, from which is expected to emanate the chief obstacles to Hull's hoped-for unanimity among the 21 republics on measures to safeguard the security and economy of the New World.

The delegation from Argentina, a country which already is showing signs of resistance to any plans which might further disrupt its trade with European countries, does not arrive until Monday morning, when the business sessions begin.

While Hull guarded carefully any proposals that he brought from Washington, officials of other countries forecast definite steps at this meeting to immunize all the Americas against any military or trade threats that may grow out of the European war.

Despite the absence of military experts from the United States and most of the other delegations some quarters predicted at least preliminary action on joint military plans for this hemisphere.

What concerned Latin-American delegations even more than military threats was what the United States could do to relieve their economic difficulties arising from the loss of European markets.

'GWTW' Pays 97 Per Cent of Original Cost

Tax Assessor Values Negative, 14 Color Prints at $500,275.

LOS ANGELES, July 20.—(P)—The movie "Gone With the Wind" earned a gross of $12,402,463 up to June 9 and paid back 97 per cent of its original cost of $4,800,000, Assessor John R. Quinn said today.

Quinn recited the figures to the county supervisors, sitting as a special board of equalization to determine the valuation of the negative and 14 color prints of the production.

The assessor placed the amount at $500,275, but Selznick International Pictures, Inc., and Loew's, Inc., producers and distributors, respectively, urged that the valuation be cut to $134,615.

The supervisors upheld Quinn's assessment.

Welles Studies British-French Row on Planes

U. S. Works To Prevent Any Clash by Ex-Allies at Martinique.

WASHINGTON, July 20.—(AP)—Rival British and French claims to some 100 American-made warplanes held by the French at the Caribbean island of Martinique were submitted today to Acting Secretary of State Sumner Welles.

Count Rene de St. Quentin, the French ambassador, and Lord Lothian, the British envoy, conferred separately with Welles on the dispute.

The planes were taken to Martinique from Canada by the French aircraft carrier Bearn, following the French armistice with Germany. The point is whether they were included in an agreement by which the British, after the armistice, took over commitments of the Anglo-French purchasing mission.

The French contention is understood to be that, although the planes were purchased jointly, they were paid for by France and were being delivered when the French collapse came.

The United States' objective is to forestall the possibility of a British-French naval clash. British warships reportedly have blockaded the island.

"CONGRATULATIONS, CHAMP"—Prince Royal Jr. (right), runner-up in the Buford Soap Box Derby yesterday, congratulated the winner, Douglas Puckett, after the race. Sponsored by the McDonald Motor Company and the Buford advertisers, this meeting drew a crowd of 2,000 persons.

Puckett Wins Deen Explains Buford's First Letters About Subscriptions

Last Year's Unofficial Winner Repeats; Lee's Car Held Best.

By CAROLYN MCKENZIE.

Buford, Ga., July 20.—Thirteen-year-old Douglas Puckett this afternoon sent his home-built racer streaking across the finish line at 40 miles an hour to win the first Buford Soap Box Derby, a trial heat for the North Georgia championship race to be run in Atlanta next Saturday.

It was the second time Douglas had won in a first trial heat, though it was this city's first official race.

Unofficial Winner. Last year five boys built their racers and held an unofficial race. Douglas won and was taken by Buford merchants to Atlanta to enter the official Derby there. He was a winner in the opening round there last year.

Sponsored by the McDonald Chevrolet Company and Buford advertisers, this event drew one of the largest crowds ever to gather here. The course was three-quarters of a mile long.

Prince Royal Jr., runner-up in the racing event, and Douglas Lee, owner of the best-built car, also received laurels at the derby. Lee will come to Atlanta with Puckett Saturday, July 27, for the North Georgia championship race, when the owner of the fastest and the best-built cars will receive the grand awards of a midsize automobile carrying a one-half horsepower motor.

Given Help. Puckett, after winning the Buford event last year, came to Atlanta with only $1 in his pocket, never expecting to stay more than one day. But he won his first heat, and his sponsors had already left for home; so the young racer spent the night at the home of M. N. Van Devender.

After the interest and enthusiasm which was manifested by a crowd of about 2,000 persons, officials determined this afternoon to stage one of the state's largest races next year, with many times the entries of this year's event.

Deen Explains Letters About Subscriptions

Sought To Get 'Real Facts' Before People, Says Welfare Head.

Two sets of form letters, one asking aid of county welfare directors in securing subscriptions for the Alma Times and the second cancelling the request, were written during May by Braswell Deen, director of the Georgia Department of Public Welfare, it was disclosed yesterday.

Mr. Deen is owner of the Alma Times and in his first letter pointed out he was soon to resume writing editorials for that paper in a plan "which will enable me to reach a great many of the influential citizens of the state with the correct facts, figures and interpretation of the various programs which are administered by the respective county welfare departments."

"I have concluded that if 15 or 20 leading citizens in various sections of your county who are interested in our program will read my editorials for the next few months, and in turn pass the information along to their neighbors, that it will be of great help in the furtherance of the program, will help you in the solution of your problems and give the general public a better understanding of what we are trying to do," the letter continued.

Deen continued: "I know you are busy and I am not asking you to do anything but to hand this letter to a responsible person who is a friend to our program, and who is helping you with your problems and to ask him or her if they will secure 15 or 20 subscriptions to my newspaper, The Alma Times, Alma, Ga., at the regular price of $1.50 for each year's subscription."

"I will therefore thank you to forward the names and addresses of the persons together with their remittance."

The second letter, under date of May 31, explained he had not intended for his paper nor had he asked them to turn the letter over to the county boards of welfare for action. In it he further explained that he had found another method of reaching the people of Georgia and for the directors to disregard the first letter.

Reached at his home in Alma last night, Deen said the new plan was to run for governor. "I can't talk politics but I can talk welfare and intend to do so now more than ever that some people are questioning the purpose of these letters," Deen declared.

"Charges made by some politicians and others against the whole welfare program and parts of it, aggravate me greatly at times. It was immediately after one of these aggravating charges that I wrote the first letter. I wanted to get the real facts before the good honest people of the state. I did not ask the county directors to solicit subscriptions for my paper and I had no intention of asking them to bother the county boards. With the second letter, I returned every check that had been mailed me for subscriptions from this source.

"There is nothing wrong in either of those letters. I was merely seeking a way in which to explain to the people of this state what the welfare program, particularly social security and the building programs, were designed to do."

Council To Act On New Salary Plan for City

$24,000 Increase To Be Recommended at Session Tomorrow.

By HERMAN HANCOCK.

City council tomorrow will be asked to adopt a modified salary classification plan for 3,100 city employees calling for an increase of about $24,000 in salary accounts for the current year, which now total $3,500,000, it was learned yesterday.

Members of council's finance committee were reported yesterday to have agreed tacitly on the compromise program and to be ready to pass finally on the revised figures at a special meeting slated for 2 o'clock tomorrow afternoon, an hour before council itself convenes to act on a salary plan.

Keep General Plan. Recommendations proposed by the finance committee preserve in the main the general plan as recommended by Public Administration Service, engaged to conduct a job and salary classification for city workers, it was said in reliable quarters, but salaries of various departments were pegged at specific figures instead of on a sliding scale as recommended by PAS.

In cutting salary increases to approximately $24,000 for about 186 employees for the first year, the finance committee decided it could not provide the $71,214.66 recommended by PAS consultants for 465 employees. It also definitely held that the $90,000 in increases sought by leaders of two city hall unions could not be made, and that the city's income could not possibly justify increasing pay rolls in excess of $200,000 a year, a sum asked by various department heads.

Decision Definite. Although members of the finance committee and aides in the office of City Comptroller B. Graham West declined to discuss any figures relative to the recommendations which the finance committee will make, city hall observers said that an announcement that the committee would be ready to report tomorrow "is proof conclusive that the committee already has decided pretty definitely just what it proposes to do."

It is known that Mayor Hartsfield and other administration leaders are anxious to preserve the financial integrity of the city and that recommendations which in their judgment might jeopardize the city's credit will be resisted.

Committee members made no announcement of their recommendations pending tomorrow's meetings, apparently to avoid any pressure from any groups which might be interested. They refused to comment at all, and said everything depends on what action is taken Monday.

Sources of Pressure. Pressure could come from the city personnel board, which is generally regarded as favoring the report of PAS; from labor representatives, which told committee members when they submitted the request for the $90,000 in increases, the increases asked "are conservative"; from department heads, whose requests have failed to materialize even more than the other two because they sought increases in excess of $200,000 a year, and from individuals employed by the city who are making the rounds to see that their individual cases are cared for in the new recommendations.

No large salary hikes are included in what is regarded as the "compromise" salary classification plan, it was said, but many of those in the lower brackets "will get some help in an effort to eliminate inequalities."

Want Careers. Adoption of some sort of an equitable salary classification program is necessary to convert city jobs into careers instead of political plums, proponents of civil service contend.

It was said yesterday that committee members feel the revised plan, which they propose to submit, while it does not eliminate all inequalities, it is a step in the right direction.

2,500,000 to Find Jobs, CIO Report Forecasts

WASHINGTON, July 20.—(AP)—The CIO estimated today that 2,500,000 unemployed would find jobs in the next 12 months as a result of the rearmament program. Actual defense expenditures in this period, the organization's economic outlook said, are expected to be $6,400,000,000. Estimating the number of unemployed at 10,748,000, it said an annual arms expenditure of 15 to 20 billions would be required to employ all of them.

Atlanta Ready To Train 500 For Defense

Six Weeks' Course To Open When State Gives 'Go' Signal.

The Atlanta school system yesterday threw into gear its plan to train vocationally 500 students as part of the national defense program with announcement at a board of education special meeting that the board president, Ed S. Cook, will appoint a special five-member coordinating committee, and registration of students for the six weeks' course will begin within 12 hours after state authorities announce readiness.

M. D. Mobley, director of the Georgia State Department of Vocational Education, was out of the city yesterday and other aides could give no information as to how soon the training may be begun. Willis A. Sutton, school superintendent, and Thomas W. Clift, school business manager, said technical training would be provided in nine subjects, and that students would be required to attend classes six hours a day five days a week for the training period.

Instruction in machine shop, electricity, ground aviation, automobile maintenance, foundry, wood work, cabinet making, sheet metal work, radio and chemistry will be included in the curricula, Clift emphasized.

Clift said the large number which can be accommodated will be possible through staggering technical training in ships with classes in theory and collateral subjects.

While one group works three hours in shops, another group will be in classrooms, he pointed out. Funds for the work are provided in a $15,000,000 federal appropriation contained in recent national defense allocations. All instructional expenses, supplies, maintenance and repair of equipment and other overhead is to be paid through funds allocated to various states.

Although no definite time has been set for the start of the work in Atlanta, Cook said the deal board was ready.

"We want to co-operate as fully as possible and propose to do our full share in meeting any emergency which may arise," he added. "Other members of the board and the school administrative staff are unanimous in this viewpoint. As soon as the state gives the go signal, we will begin registration of students."

Two Are Killed In Rail Wreck At Cartersville

rumble of thunder," brought hundreds to the scene in a few minutes, from the highway beside the tracks and from the near-by Cartersville golf course.

Aiding Cartersville firemen they attempted to beat back the flames which ate from the wrecked engines and tumbled boxcars toward the huge storage tanks of the Gulf Oil Company beside the tracks, and attempted in vain to reach the bodies of the men imprisoned in the blazing wreckage.

As they worked, the wind veered, turning the flames toward the derailed tank cars, and with a shattering roar, two of the three cars exploded.

With blazing oil showering upon them, burning them on backs, arms and shoulders, they attempted to flee and many were knocked down and trampled.

Highway patrolmen, warned by a railroad official there was danger of the tanks blowing up, were attempting to get the crowds back when the explosion came.

"We weren't making much progress at first, and the crowd kept moving up closer and closer, as near as they could get and bear the heat," said Trooper H. F. Culbertson.

"Then all of a sudden there was a big explosion and it looked as if the sky was covered with a sheet of flame.

"We didn't have any trouble keeping them back after that," Trooper Culbertson estimated that at least 30 were burned seriously enough to require treatment, and that probably double that number were blistered by the terrific heat or scattered flames from the blow-up.

Doctors Wofford and Stanford listed those treated by them as:

Frank Seagars, truck driver for the city of Cartersville, overcome by heat.

Ralph Bagley, cut arm, probably by flying steel from the bursting tank cars, burned on both arms and on the neck.

Johnny Caldwell, burned on both arms and across the back.

Richard Gravelly, burned across the shoulders, on the back and arms.

"Red" Duncan, of Cartersville, who was aiding in fighting the fire, burned on the body.

Emory Smith, burned about the neck, and cut on the knee.

'Bat Man' Leaps At 10,000 Feet And Disappears

Plane Pilot Fails To See 'Chute Jumper in Air.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., July 20. (UP)—"Ace" Von Korb, Denver aerial performer self-billed as the "bat man," leaped out of an airplane at a height of 10,000 feet in a practice jump today and disappeared.

George Hawley, private pilot who was handling the plane, said he watched Von Korb jump from the ship wearing a parachute and fabric wings fastened to his arms and legs, but then lost sight of him.

A small crowd that had assembled to watch the aerial artist make his practice jump did not see him leave the plane at the nearly two-mile height and did not see him descend.

The Civil Aeronautics Authority, discounting the theory that the disappearance was a publicity stunt, began an investigation. Sheriff's deputies searched the area on the outskirts of town where it was believed the "bat man" fell.

Van Korb had applied for a job performing at an air show here next week but was turned down because of lack of experience.

Hawley said Von Korb stepped out of the ship at 10,000 feet and he immediately bailed the plane to give the aerialist clearance. When he straightened out, Hawley said, the "bat man" had disappeared. The pilot said he was certain he would have seen him had his parachute been open.

CAA officials theorized the "bat man" was a stunt man who used to guide his descent, might have become meshed in the parachute shroud lines.

trying to do what they could, but the heat was so terrific it was impossible to get real close.

"I was going away from the scene when I heard the roar of the tank cars blowing up. I looked back. It looked like there was a solid jet of flame 500 feet long shooting upward from the tank. Then people started running and yelling and you could tell that some had been pretty badly burned.

The exploding tank cars spread the flames to derailed box cars, setting them afire, and adding to the difficulties of rescue attempts, Boyles said.

L. D. Pezler, station agent at Cartersville, said that the switch engine was backing out of the spur track after a trip to the Thompson-Weinman barites mill, one-half mile up the spur. The freight, carrying 60 cars, 12 of which were derailed in the crash, was on the run from Atlanta to Chattanooga.

Gilstrap was a native of Emerson, Ga., and went to work for the N. C. & St. L. 28 years ago last December 11, the date which was also his birthday. He was 58 years old.

He served 15 years as a switch engineer in Cartersville. He was a member of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Engineers, Atlanta Lodge No. 247. He was a Baptist.

Surviving are his wife; two sons, Lindsey Jr. and Wallace A. Gilstrap; his mother, Mrs. J. W. Gilstrap; two brothers, J. W. and T. W. Gilstrap, both of Atlanta, and two sisters, Mrs. Pearl Twazer, of Chattanooga, and Mrs. Daisy Williams, of Emerson.

Johnson Suit Accuses Two Of Defrauding

D. B. Blalock, His Company and E. L. Rowland Charged.

A suit charging that D. B. (Brack) Blalock, his machinery company and E. L. Rowland, former ordinary of Johnson county, conspired to defraud Johnson county out of $5,000 in a 1936 road machinery deal was filed yesterday in Fulton county.

The legal action seeks to recover the sum from the two men and the Atlanta machinery company headed by Blalock.

Both Blalock and Rowland are under indictment in Johnson county now in connection with the same transaction, it was reported. They were named in true bills, returned by the 1939 September term grand jury, charging conspiracy to defraud the county of $5,000. Rowland is also under indictment there on charges of embezzlement involving duplicated salary checks, it was said. Their trials are scheduled for this fall.

Filed by C. S. Claxton, Johnson county attorney, and the Atlanta firm of Hooper, Hooper and Miller, the suit in Fulton superior court charges that Rowland committed a breach of trust and that he and Blalock illegally obtained and divided the $5,000.

Wrightsville County Seat. In 1936, Johnson county, of which Wrightsville is the county seat, was indebted to the Austin-Western Machinery Company for $16,029.87, plus interest totaling $6,000, the suit set out. Blalock, as agent in Georgia for the Austin-Western company, demanded payment but the county did not have the money, it was stated in the suit.

Rowland, charged by the county with the duty of paying warrants against it, then sold $32,084.54 worth of state highway refunding certificates for $26,858.93, which was deposited in the Citizens & Southern National Bank in Atlanta, the suit alleged.

In the meantime, the suit set out, the Austin-Western company had been induced to accept a total of $15,000 in full payment of Johnson county's debt and a check for this amount was drawn from the Atlanta bank by Rowland and sent to the Austin-Western company.

Then on July 30, 1936, another check for $5,000 was drawn by Rowland to the Blalock Machinery & Equipment Company and was cashed by it, the county contends.

Charges Sum Divided. The county charged that Rowland, Blalock and the Blalock Machinery & Equipment Company divided this sum.

The suit alleges that Rowland, knowing of the total settlement of the debt with the Austin-Western company, had voluntarily paid Blalock $5,000 in order to "reap personal benefit," and that this constituted a breach of trust in which Blalock participated, making the two men and the machinery and equipment company liable jointly.

The law calls for money from highway refunding certificates to be applied to bonded indebtedness of the county, the suit charged. It was alleged that in paying the $5,000 to Blalock, it was not applied to highway construction nor to the county's sinking fund, and therefore was illegal.

The suit seeks a judgment from the superior court of Fulton county for the sum plus interest.

British Expect Income Taxes Of 45 Per Cent

Chamberlain and Aide Face Another Test Over War Budget.

LONDON, July 20.—(UP)—Great Britain tonight prepared to face perhaps the largest war budget in her history—a budget which will shoot taxation to unprecedented levels and might conscript capital through compulsory loans.

Income taxes, which now take 37 1-2 per cent of taxable incomes, are expected to be boosted another 7 1-2 per cent.

On Tuesday, Sir Kingsley Wood, chancellor of the exchequer, will present to the house of commons the first war budget of the Churchill government. The preceding two budgets were considered failures and resulted in dismissal "upstairs" to the house of lords of Sir John Simon, Neville Chamberlain's chancellor of the exchequer.

Thus, if Wood makes no better showing, it is expected there will be another struggle over the issue "Chamberlain must go." The former prime minister is still lord president of the council.

Newspapers friendly to the chancellor of the exchequer believe he will raise the money, half by taxes, the other half by borrowing.

As usual, the total of the new budget will remain secret until Wood reads his message before the house. But the British public, according to the newspapers, is willing to go the limit with taxation in order to prevent inflation.

Narcotics Seized On Japanese Ship

SAN FRANCISCO, July 20.—(P)—United States customs agents seized 17 pounds, 3 ounces of narcotics aboard a Japanese freighter today in a raid the state narcotics chief hinted would have international ramifications and involve contraband worth more than $1,000,000. A Japanese was arrested.

Paul E. Madden, chief of the California narcotics enforcement division, said the narcotic seizure (cocaine) was the largest "in a long, long time." It would be valued "wholesale" at $81,000 and probably would bring well above $200,000 in illegal street sales, he added.

Mr. Lee extends his friends and customers a cordial invitation to call on him at Rhodes-Wood. —(adv.)

French People Still the Same, Bullitt Asserts

Qualities Intact, Envoy Says on Returning to the U. S.

NEW YORK, July 20.—(UP)—William C. Bullitt, United States ambassador to France who has been unable to communicate confidentially with his government since June 12, returned by transatlantic clipper today to "get in touch" with President Roosevelt and reported that despite the German invasion "the qualities of the people of France remain absolutely intact."

The ambassador stepped from the Pan-American Airways Dixie Clipper ahead of the former Empress Zita of Austria, who with her daughter, Princess Elizabeth, had flown here to join her sons, Archduke Otto and Archduke Felix.

Tanned and dapper as always, Bullitt asked first for an American cigarette and then gave the first interview he ever has granted on a return from Europe. His greatest praise was for the French people and Marshal Henri Philippe Petain, who, he said, "is rapidly bringing order out of desperate disorder." His greatest concern was for 10,500,000 French and Belgian refugees, whose problem he termed "the greatest ever."

He described the German occupation of Paris as "very peaceful" and told of his own narrow escape when a bomb lodged in the ceiling above his head—and failed to explode.

"I hope everyone realizes that the French people still have the same magnificent qualities they always had," Bullitt said. "The French soldier of 1940 is the same as the French soldier of 1914. All the qualities of the people of France remain absolutely intact. There is plenty of food in some parts of France and none in others. There is terrible misery in some parts. The difficulties in transportation of food are enormous. Petain, who is universally respected in France, and I think the whole world, despite his age, is rapidly bringing order out of desperate disorder."

(Several hours after the Dixie Clipper arrived, the Yankee Clipper glided down to the waters of Flushing bay with 35 passengers and 1,843 pounds of mail, from Horta, the Azores, by way of Bermuda, according to the Associated Press.

Petain's Man New Governor Of Indo-China

Japanese Aspirations Believed Helped by Shift in Officials.

HANOI, French Indo-China July 20.—(P)—French Indo-China changed governors today in a move which may speed Japan's growing influence in southern Asia.

Admiral Jean Decoux, named by the totalitarian government of Marshal Philippe Petain, took over administration of this French colony from General George Catroux.

Outwardly, at least, the change was amicably arranged.

The new administration is generally expected to facilitate far-reaching economic dealings with the Japanese government.

Little is known of Admiral Decoux's attitude or intentions beyond the fact that, as a naval veteran, he feels deeply on the action taken by the British against the French fleet at Oran.

The Indo-China public of 23,000,000 people learned of the change in the governorship today at the same time it heard that Tokyo economic experts were arriving by plane to conclude a sweeping trade agreement, involving probably 78 per cent barter.

The mission, headed by General Issakh Hishihara, has virtually finished sealing the Chinese border.

The blockade against China has been severe. At least 100,000 tons of supplies for China—oil, tires, trucks and finished goods—and several hundred tons of medical supplies were trapped at Haiphong when the border was closed.

Labor Queries Candidates on Their Views

Barrage of Questions Fired; Voters Will Learn of Opinions.

By LUKE GREENE.

Labor took a political X-ray of Georgia's gubernatorial candidates yesterday to see how they stand on the major issues affecting the rank and file of the state's working men and women.

One by one the candidates filed into a room in a downtown hotel and faced a barrage of questions fired at them by members of the executive board of the Georgia Federation of Labor.

Dewey L. Johnson, president of the federation, said the labor organization would not endorse any one candidate for Governor, but the information gathered from the candidates will be compiled and sent out to the various labor unions in the state so that their members can decide for whom they shall vote.

What the candidates had to say in that executive session yesterday may mean a great deal when September 11 rolls around and the voters march to the polls to cast their ballots.

Although the labor leaders insist that they are not endorsing a candidate, the information that does out to the laboring men and women won't have much doubt as to whom they are supposed to vote for to protect their best interests.

50,000 Labor Votes.

Johnson estimated there are about 50,000 labor votes in Georgia. Candidates in the past have felt that labor plays a big part in Georgia elections and endeavored to keep from alienating it.

There were other political developments yesterday. Candidate Abit Nix returned from the Democratic national convention in Chicago with high praise for President Roosevelt, despite the fact that Ben F. Neal, of Montezuma, executive committeeman of the Democratic Council of Georgia, had charged in a radio address Friday night that Nix was a "Roosevelt coat-tailer" who would "stab his politics in the back."

"On all sides I found great enthusiasm for President Roosevelt and for continuation of his policies and principles of government. And I consider the platform one on which all Democrats throughout the country can unite for a glorious victory in November," said Nix.

Says Issue Clear Cut. He expressed the opinion that the issue in the national campaign was definite and clear cut. "It is whether the nation desires a progressive liberal democracy, or a reactionary government," he explained. "This issue is as clear-cut as the sun."

In rushing to the side of President Roosevelt, Candidate Columbus Roberts had a one-day lead. He already had sent the President a telegram extolling his congratulations, but omitted the name of Henry A. Wallace, the vice-presidential nominee. He had an explanation for this yesterday in a statement in which he said there was "no intention on my part to omit the name of Mr. Henry Wallace from the telegram."

Roberts said his dealings with Wallace and the United States Department of Agriculture "have been most pleasant and absolutely free of friction in any respect and with the utmost co-operation." He said he planned to give the Democratic ticket his full support.

Aide to Roberts. Robert's headquarters announced that Mrs. J. A. Rollison, of Waycross, had been selected to organize a woman's division of the Roberts-for-Governor campaign. Her office will be in the Piedmont hotel, across the hall from that of Gordon S. Chapman, campaign manager.

Mrs. Rollison has served as state chairman for the woman's division of the Democratic party and was aide to both Senator Russell and Senator George in their campaigns. She invited Georgia women to visit her headquarters when they were in Atlanta.

Up in Cherokee county, Eugene Talmadge, in a political speech, charged that the State Highway Department "went on a road machinery shopping spree that has loaded Georgia up with carloads of machines—enough to last for a decade."

"We're going to turn that excess machinery over to the counties," he asserted, "and give them a chance to bring their post road systems and their secondary roads up to an all-weather condition, and work out their financial independence through county road contracts.

"Forgotten Law." He explained that a "forgotten law," the post road act, provided the necessary legal machinery for the plan.

While the candidates launch further into their campaigns, Georgia's Prohibition party will hold its state convention at 11 o'clock Tuesday morning in the DeKalb county courthouse in Decatur. Reports will be given by the platform and nominating committees.

I. P. Glass, chairman of the state committee, which held a meeting last week, explained that the party's purpose is to restore prohibition to Georgia by the election of state and national officers pledged to that purpose.

A big political rally will be held at Toccoa Tuesday. All gubernatorial candidates have been invited to speak.

Nix's headquarters announced he would speak at Watkinsville Wednesday as guest of the American Legion post, and at Warm Springs at 2:30 o'clock Saturday. Roberts also will speak at Toccoa, Watkinsville and Warm Springs. It was also announced that Nix had accepted an invitation to speak at Dublin September 7, the Saturday before the election.

Nix will discuss "The National Picture As Related to Georgia" in a radio address at 1 o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

Upon his return from Chicago yesterday, Nix was given a luncheon by Jere Wells and the Fulton Nix-for-Governor Club at which future plans of the club were discussed.

riage, but that it had been kept a secret from the public because of Miss Keyes' career.

Evelyn, who played the role of Suelien in "Gone With the Wind," had not told her of any marital difficulties, she said.

She added that she would not go to California, in view of the fact that Evelyn's sister, Mrs. J. G. Luter, and her brother, Garrett Keyes, are there now.

Bainbridge's body was found slumped in his car, a rifle wound through his head. Police pronounced his death a suicide, and said they believed he had held the rifle between his knees and pressed the trigger with his thumb.

No notes were found with the body, but Bainbridge's friends attributed his act to despondency over his separation from his wife.

Miss Keyes' first film was "The Buccaneer," which was produced by Cecil B. deMille, to whom she was under personal contract.

When the American Legion convention was held in Los Angeles, she was chosen "Miss American Legion" by the national legion and later made a film called "Sons of the Legion." Her most recent appearance was as Suelien in "Gone With the Wind."

Prisoner Fails In Attempt To Gain Freedom

Former Inmate of Federal Penitentiary Being Held for Bay State.

Franklin E. Robbins, who said he was a graduate of a law university in Boston, Mass., was his own attorney yesterday in Fulton superior court in a habeas corpus action seeking freedom from Fulton tower, but his eloquence failed to gain it for him.

Robbins was released last week from the federal penitentiary here after serving a two-year sentence for impersonating a federal officer, and the sheriff took him into custody immediately on eight warrants, which were issued in Massachusetts, charging larceny, forgery and robbery.

Waits Requisition. Temporarily, he was being held on a fugitive warrant issued by Governor Rivers July 15 ordering that he be held by Sheriff J. C. Aldredge for 20 days, pending requisition papers from Massachusetts. It was on this fugitive warrant that Robbins based his plea of habeas corpus.

He told Judge E. E. Pomeroy yesterday morning that he was by no manner of means a fugitive from justice in the commonwealth of Massachusetts. To be a fugitive, he maintained, means a man is voluntarily fleeing from justice. He did not do that, he said. On the contrary, when he finished his sentence at the federal penitentiary, the federal officers turned him over immediately to the county officials and he was never a free man to flee justice, he declared.

Cites Much Law. And to support this contention, he cited law from the states all the way from Maine to Wyoming, including a dip into the deep south to touch Alabama.

But his fine legal point had already been settled very conclusively in Georgia. Years ago Victor E. Innes, who was charged with the double murder of two young Atlanta girls, the Nelms sisters, fought for his freedom on the same point. Innes was captured in Oregon, taken to San Antonio, Texas, and tried for the double murder. He came clear when no bodies could be found. Then he was brought back to Georgia on an indictment charging larceny after trust of the sisters' money. He contended then he was not a fugitive in Texas but had been brought there by officers. He carried the case to the supreme court of the United States, which held his extradition legal.

Petition Denied. Judge Pomeroy denied Robbins' petition and remanded him to jail to await Massachusetts extradition papers.

Aldredge said the eastern state wanted Robbins on one count of larceny of a car, two counts of larceny of property, two counts of forgery and four counts of robbery.

Entries Close Thursday for State Offices

New Candidates Qualify for September Primary; Mrs. Hogan Back.

Prospective candidates for state offices have until 1 o'clock (Atlanta time) next Thursday to qualify for the September 11 primary, Mrs. Kathleen Hogan, assistant secretary of the state Democratic executive committee, announced yesterday upon her return from the national convention in Chicago.

Mrs. Hogan said the rules call for the closing of entries at 12 o'clock (central time) July 25, which would be 1 o'clock Atlanta time. She said all entries mailed on or before that date would be accepted.

At the same time she announced the official qualification of several candidates who filled out entry blanks during her absence. They were as follows:

Harvey C. Cutts, of Greenville, for state superintendent of schools. W. C. Forehand, of Sylvester, to succeed himself as solicitor general of the Tifton circuit. A. S. Skelton, of Hartwell, to succeed himself as solicitor general of the northern circuit.

Hubert Calhoun, to succeed himself as solicitor general of the Chattahoochee circuit.

Defense Program May Keep Congress Busy Until Christmas

Senate Group Will Consider Training Plan

Roosevelt Signs Naval Bill Providing for 'Supremacy' Fleet.

WASHINGTON, July 20.—(UP) Congress looked forward tonight to a summer-long labor on national defense problems.

By the time it leaves in the fall, or perhaps not until Christmas, it is almost certain to have enacted some form of compulsory military training act and to have approved added billions that will give the army formidable mechanized divisions and armadas of warplanes.

When Congress rejected suggestions late in the spring that it adjourn, President Roosevelt said that he could find plenty of work to give the lawmakers. Work on two major items starts next week as follows:

House deficiency appropriations subcommittee starts on Monday hearings on the $4,848,171,957 appropriation and authorization bill for the army, navy and air force.

Training Measure. The senate military affairs committee resumes consideration of the Burke-Wadsworth bill requiring registration of all men from 18 to 65 for some type of defense training, including military duty.

Chairman Clifton A. Woodrum, of the house appropriations subcommittee, said that Secretary of Navy Frank Knox, Admiral Harold R. Stark, chief of naval operations, Rear Admiral John H. Towers, chief of the Naval Bureau of Aeronautics, and other navy officials would appear Monday and Tuesday on the defense bill. They will be followed, he said, by Secretary of War Henry L. Stimson, General George C. Marshall, chief of staff, Assistant Secretary of War Louis

Johnson and General H. H. Arnold, chief of the Air Corps.

When the Burke-Wadsworth bill reaches the senate floor, it is due for long debate, because there are senators who agree with Senator Henry Cabot Lodge, Republican, Massachusetts, who wants a standing army of 750,000 men with equipment for 2,000,000. The manpower would be raised by a draft of men 21 to 25 years of age. General Marshall said that he wanted a conscription act that would permit him to call up 400,000 men by October, 400,000 more by April, 1941, and 600,000 more by October, 1942. General Marshall also wants to mobilize the National Guard immediately, and legislation permitting that, together with wider use of the militia under federal orders, is destined to require immediate congressional attention. As soon as such authorization is granted, the President proposes to call up four National Guard divisions for intensive training.

Later in the session some groundwork may be laid down on the President's request for an excess profits tax to prevent war millionaires.

Naval Bill Signed. Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg, Republican, Michigan, who believes that Congress should remain in session during the emergency, said that he piles "anyone who votes to adjourn in the present temper of the country."

Senator George C. Democrat, Georgia, said that there are minor pieces of legislation on the calendar which may be acted upon this summer, including the house-approved amendments to the Wagner act and the Walter-Logan bill, which would give federal circuit courts the right to veto rules of some federal administrative agencies.

Meanwhile, President Roosevelt signed the $4,000,000,000 naval expansion bill authorizing construction of 200 more warships, sufficient to form battle fleets for two oceans, as a guarantee of United States supremacy of the world's sea lanes.

The program will require at least six years to complete, but when it is done the United States is destined to stand pre-eminent in sea power with 701 combat ships, including 35 battleships, 20 aircraft carriers, 88 cruisers, 378 destroyers and 180 submarines. This will be larger than the combined fleets of the totalitarian powers—Japan, Italy, Germany and Russia.

Up to Industry. While this major effort to bring the navy to top place in the world was under way, the War Department announced that it believes and expects private industry to be able to handle the aircraft expansion program without the government having to construct plants. This private plant expansion is scheduled to be arranged through a loan program of $71,000,000 by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to private manufacturers.

The RFC in addition is scheduled to lend about $100,000,000 more to private industry for nonaircraft plants. Authorities said that these steps will increase America's productive capacity so that British war orders on a much larger scale than the current ones can be handled without interfering with United States defense requirements. One official said that Britain's problem therefore is to last until winter, when air raids will lessen due to inclement weather. American production capacity will be adequate for both nations by the spring, he said.

In addition to the new ships, the expansion bill also authorizes an increase from 10,000 to 15,000 naval planes and permits the secretary of the navy to raise the figure.

Mexican President Asks Compulsory Training Bill

MEXICO CITY, July 20.—(AP)—President Lazaro Cardenas sent to congress today a bill to establish universal compulsory military training in Mexico. Its passage was considered assured.

In a message accompanying the bill he said, "The situation which prevails in the world because of the European war urgently demands that nations take adequate means to prevent unjustified aggressions."

Ten-Billion-Dollar Army of Million Highly Trained Troops Will Stand Guard Over U.S. in Three Years Under Defense Plan

World Scoured for Vast Amounts of Strategic Raw Materials.

By WILL P. KENNEDY.

For North American Newspaper Alliance.

WASHINGTON, July 20.—For the first time in this nation's history, the United States Army is being put in shape for adequate national defense, against any foreign foe augmented by a "Fifth Column," under an intensive five-year program that started 18 months ago—at a cost that will run in excess of $10,000,000,000.

The objective is to train an army of a million men, thoroughly equipped and supported by vast stores of arms and ammunition, within three years—if the urgent need continues. The ceiling has been taken off regarding military aviation, with 11,000 planes under order and 85,000 personnel sought by next year.

Modeled after the effective Panzer Division of the German invasion, the army already has a new combat unit—an armored corps of two divisions, already equipped, which will be expanded just as soon as heavy tanks can be turned out.

Drive in Full Swing.

Vast quantities of munitions and material of all sorts are being provided not only for equipment of the expanded army, but for a reserve reservoir. The world has been scoured for tremendous quantities of strategic raw materials which are now coming in for storage against possible future needs.

After 20 years of preparation for the army, and six years behind the start of the navy building program in 1933, the drive to make the army ready is now in full swing and industrial production will grow in momentum. It must be clearly understood that only a fraction of the tremendous appropriations now being made for the army go into increasing the actual fighting force. This enormously expanded program entails innumerable collateral expenses—such as housing, Air Corps technical construction, new tooling, enlarged training programs—all in addition to housekeeping and maintenance costs.

The United States today has the largest peacetime fighting force it ever had—an authorized army of 375,000, with 145,000 to be recruited during the coming year (98,000 for the ground forces and 47,000 Air Corps enlisted men), all of whom will be thoroughly equipped within two years.

How It Happened.

To illustrate how the expansion has been made by leaps and bounds—the army started in June, 1939, with a fighting force of 167,000 men; congress said, "We'll give you 210,000." Then in September the President asked for 227,000; in May, General George C. Marshall, chief of staff, said he should have 15,000 more; the senate added enough to make it 280,000, which was estimated to be the correct size of the standing army in peacetime. The last supplemental appropriation bill added 95,000 men (40,000 of whom are for the Air Corps) by giving money to increase the army to 375,000. But all these are not concentrated in a fighting unit.

General Marshall estimates he needs 70,000 men for overseas duty in Puerto Rico, Panama, Hawaii, the Philippines and Alaska for sea-coast defenses, anti-aircraft ground force to protect aviation and naval bases. Also must be deducted 95,000 in the Air Corps, and another 60,000 for general housekeeping, overhead, schools, instructors and on duty with the National Guard, R. O. T. C. and recruiting. This is a total of 225,000, leaving only 150,000 for a striking force of ground troops.

To Call Reserves.

The regular army has 15,350 officers. About 9,000 reserve officers are to be called to extended active duty with troops of the regular army by a selective process to fill particular posts for which they have special technical training. The National Guard is to be expanded to 17,000 officers and 235,000 enlisted men. The present strength of the Officers Reserve Corps is approximately 125,000, including about 8,000 who were graduated this year from the senior R. O. T. C. courses. Approximately 110,000 of these are considered available for active duty assignments in the event of an emergency. The regular army enlisted reserve consists of about 28,000 men, all of whom have at least one enlistment in the regular army.

As the navy building program places emphasis on navy aviation, so also does the army preparedness program consider development of a super air corps imperatively urgent, and that land-based aviation is the air force of defense. Navy aviation goes with the fleet, as its "eyes," for scouting duty and to protect the fleet. Military aviation protects the naval bases, the overseas insular and territory possessions—as well as being a most important combat arm in modern warfare. Military aviation is divided into two branches: (1) Goes with the army particularly for scout duty and for quick messenger service; (2) actually fights against the air force of an enemy.

This photograph presents an estimate of the growth in the Nation's armed forces—man power, equipment and ships—to be purchased with a major part of the $10,000,000,000 in appropriations and contract authorizations. Exact figures for many of the items are being withheld. These represent a conservative estimate made by several sources of the more important items on Uncle Sam's shopping list.

of the late General Westover, former chief of the Army Air Corps, who warned that the Army Air Corps must be developed as the outstanding feature of military preparedness. For years they fought for this and now they are being justified. There are many on Capitol Hill who believe the national defense program has devoted too much money to flying boats and has been penurious thus far toward army aviation. They argue that navy aviation should be confined to aircraft carriers and other naval craft equipped with catapults, and that better air defense and offense would ensue in having all other craft of the land type, because of their greater speed, range and maneuverability. The army now has on hand about 3,000 serviceable military airplanes. In addition, congress has approved funds to bring the total airplane strength up to 11,000 by 1942. This contemplates 198 tactical squadrons. Of the total only 4,000 are scheduled for use at one time as action combat planes, 3,000 are to be held in reserve for replacements or emergencies and 4,000 are to be used in training.

Planes Doubled.

The Air Corps impetus started at the close of the fiscal year June 30, 1939, when there were 56 squadrons. By the close of the calendar year, December 31, 1939, it had been increased to 69 squadrons. Then came the expansion program deadline of July 1, 1941, calling for 122 squadrons and 5,500 planes. This was heralded as an "air armada" which "will bring to full fruition the vitally important air defense program, the basis of which was initially instituted in 1933 by a Public Works Administration grant of $7,500,000 for new army aircraft." And now that number of planes has already been doubled.

It must be understood that of the 5,500 planes, only 3,300 were operating planes, and not necessarily combat planes, while 2,200 were to be in reserve or undergoing repairs and of the 3,300, only 1,965 were combat planes—the others were for training and miscellaneous use.

That 5,500 plane expansion called for an expenditure of $300,000,000, and provided for 54,000 enlisted men and 4,600 officers (including reserve officers on extended active duty). The next big step for aviation was an appropriation for 2,200 training planes, permitting pilots to be trained at the rate of 7,000 a year, and for 200 bombers. What the ultimate size of the Air Corps will be if the emergency continues is purely problematical—even to the army experts coping with this problem of preparedness.

Colombia Pledges To Protect Canal

BOGOTA, Colombia, July 20.—(AP)—President Eduardo Santos reiterated today a pledge that "no attack or threat of attack against the Panama Canal will be permitted from Colombian territory." In an Independence Day message to congress, President Santos said his statement, first made last year, was worth repeating now that the Americas are more concerned with their defense than ever.

Nazi Invasion Few Days Off, Italy Asserts

Loss of Cruiser Admitted; Rome Says 10 British Warships Hit.

ROME, July 20.—(AP)—Germany's long-awaited attempt to invade England is only a few days away unless the British surrender, an authoritative Fascist source predicted today.

"The English may be more clever on defense than on attack . . ." said the Fascist weekly, Realizzazione Internationali, "but this is a war of constant offensives in which the initiative always is Germany's privilege."

While the Italian high command was acknowledging the loss of the cruiser Bartolomeo Colleoni in yesterday's middle Mediterranean naval battle and claiming the sinking of a British warship, the official Italian news agency, Stefani, forecast the removal of two damaged vessels from Gibraltar because of Italian bombing raids there.

The British authorities, Stefani reported, are considering sending the 42,100-ton battle cruiser Hood and the 22,000-ton aircraft carrier Ark Royal elsewhere for repairs.

The likelihood of Italian troops joining the Germans in an attempt to invade England seems to have been discarded by Fascist newspapers generally.

Italians now are pointing out that they and the Germans are attacking on two widely different fronts with the Italian assault aimed at Britain's middle-eastern lifeline and Africa.

Vatican Indicates Hope Peace Will Be Talked

VATICAN CITY, July 20.—(UP)—High Vatican quarters, examining the text of Adolf Hitler's reichstag speech yesterday, were represented today as believing that at least it might afford Great Britain opportunity to ask Germany what Hitler's peace terms would be.

A semi-official Vatican news bulletin indicated the hope of churchmen that any avenue in Hitler's speech leading even remotely in the direction of peace would be explored.

British Catholics Urged To War Against Nazism

Isles of Britain Hold Economic Riches Today

Hitler Menaces Nation's Huge Industries, Banks and Resources.

By The Associated Press.
The British Isles have the world's greatest shipyards, banks with tremendous economic power, unlimited coal resources, forests of smokesacks. It is, says Hitler, one of his war aims to divest Britain of her economic power.

Up to 1850 British factories were without real competition. Since then many nations have challenged British industrial supremacy. In the Crimean war the English bested Russia. In the first World War they knocked aside Germany. Now Britain is threatened again by a great industrial power—Germany—a country that already has far outstripped her in producing finished iron and steel. Italy, Japan, the United States are other industrial powers making inroads into British markets.

The British Isles (94,000 square miles against Germany's 262,524) are head, heart and soul of the British Empire—greater empire the world has ever known. Every raw material that an industrial country needs is found somewhere in the empire. (The United States and its possessions have most things—but lack nickel, rubber, tin.) The British Isles themselves export annually 35,000,000 or more tons of coal—and coal has for 100 years been the foundation of British economic strength.

In England a surprisingly high number of persons live normally on income from investments. Most of the population is in London or the industrial areas. Only 7 per cent of the population lives off the land. It is said that at one time in World War I England had food for only two weeks. England climbed to world manufacturing supremacy by sacrificing self-sufficiency. Her ships must come in.

Here's how England divides her work:

London—Commerce, marketing; politics; some manufacturing; bankers.

South Wales (Cardiff, Bristol)—Coal metal refining; iron and steel processing. This is the "depressed area." The Duke of Windsor, when he was King Edward VIII, said something should be done about poverty, disease and squalor of workers in this region.

Birmingham Area—Manufacturing; coal; iron ore. This is "Black England," home of heavy industries.

Liverpool, Manchester—Iron and steel; commerce; new industries (chemistry, rayon).

Newcastle, Middlesbrough—Heavy iron industries; shipbuilding; glass; smelting of imported ores; coal. Remember the saying about carrying coals to Newcastle?

Scottish Lowlands (Glasgow, Edinburgh)—Coal; iron; steel; cotton textiles; ships.

9 Million Available For Aiding Health

The United States Public Health Service has available $9,500,000 for expanding and strengthening state and local health facilities in Georgia. Francis F. Shurling, state director of the Office of Government Reports, said yesterday.

The funds are made available under the Social Security Act for grants-in-aid, he said in a radio address. In addition, the United States Health Service is helping to provide more clinics and free drugs under the venereal disease control act, and the National Cancer Institute is lending to selected, competent hospitals its $200,000 worth of radium without charge to needy patients.

Hearing on Rail Rates Adjourned

Chairman Walter McDonald, of the Georgia Public Service Commission, announced yesterday the Interstate Commerce Commission's hearing on southern livestock freight rates would be adjourned until November 7.

McDonald, chairman also of the southern livestock rate steering committee, said examiners for the I. C. C. approved a motion for adjournment after counsel for defendant railroads asked extension of time to prepare testimony. The hearing is to be resumed in Savannah.

U. S. Favors Seizing Areas In Caribbean If Germans Win

87 Per Cent Would Take British, French, Dutch Holdings Near Canal; South Gives Greatest Support.

By DR. GEORGE GALLUP, Director, American Institute of Public Opinion.

Copyright, 1940, by American Institute of Public Opinion.
PRINCETON, N. J., July 20.—If the Havana conference of the 21 American republics adjourns next week without reaching a decision on the fate of the European-owned territories in the western hemisphere, there is likely to be strong sentiment in this country for United States defense of the territories—alone if necessary.

That fact is revealed today in a nation-wide survey conducted by the American Institute of Public Opinion.

From the standpoint of the United States, much will doubtless depend on the success of England in standing-off the German blitzkrieg. But the Institute survey shows that an overwhelming majority of more than 6 to 1 (87%) says the United States should take immediate possession of the British, French and Dutch territories near the Panama canal, if necessary, in the event of a British defeat.

Behind this impressive majority sentiment, the voters' comments show, is a sharp awareness of the whole problem of defending the United States and the rest of the hemisphere. The survey found no indications whatsoever of "imperialistic" sentiment.

"If necessary, the United States should take the initiative because we're the only nation in this hemisphere with a fleet strong enough to defend the Caribbean," a typical eastern voter commented.

Voters in every state in the Union were asked: "If Germany defeats England, should the United States take immediate possession of the English, French and Dutch territories in the area of the Panama canal?"

Their replies were:

Should Take Possession If Necessary 87%
Should Not Take Possession 13%

As with other questions of American foreign policy, today's survey reveals a striking degree of unanimity in both major parties and in all sections of the United States. Politics, the survey indicates once more, still stop at "the water's edge."

The vote of Democrats and Republicans is as follows:

Democrats Favoring Occupation 89% Opposing Occupation 11%
Republicans Favoring Occupation 86% Opposing Occupation 14%

Sectionally the greatest support for a policy of occupation—if necessary comes from the southern states—nearest in point of geography to the Caribbean. Even in the middle west, however, the vote averages more than 4 to 1.

New England, Middle Atlantic 87% 13%
East Central 84 16
West Central 87 13
South 94 6
West 88 12

Union Representatives Will Meet Today To Form Plans.

Plans for Atlanta's greatest Labor Day celebration in years will be discussed at 3 o'clock this afternoon at a meeting of the executive board of the Atlanta Federation of Trades and representatives of every union affiliated with the federation, Albert Gossett, president, announced Saturday.

At the same time, Gossett also announced that the federation's executive committee has completed plans for a drive for an additional 5,000 to 7,000 members from among office workers and semi-skilled groups.

Children to Honor Godfather of Play

Atlanta children will pay tribute to Joseph Lee, "Godfather of Play in America," in a special singing game and folk dance program to be held at the amphitheater in Grant park at 4 o'clock Wednesday afternoon.

Boys and girls from playgrounds of the city will take part in the celebration, which includes community singing and music by the Atlanta Civic orchestra under direction of Walter Sheehy.

Lee devoted his life and a large sum of money to obtaining public playgrounds for children of America. He served as president of the National Recreation Association from 1910 until his death in July, 1937.

Motor Club Head Bases Belief on Travel Agencies' Figures.

Increased motor travel in Georgia this year is expected to bring more than $46,800,000, the estimate for 1939, into the state.

The belief was expressed yesterday by George T. Dickson, president of the Dixie Motor Club, and was based on figures of various travel agencies.

"The war and generally disturbed conditions naturally restrict tourists largely to this country," he pointed out. "No informed person doubts that the south, and Georgia with its numerous historical and physical appeals, is drawing and will continue to draw many visitors."

Most tourists are able to make trips of but a few days' duration, he said. "The travelers take several brief vacations. Much of the growth of motor travel in recent years arises from this fact."

The total spent by motorists, both interstate and intrastate last year, was estimated at $82,732,000.

here than the entire Nazi political and military high command." The chigger war really has settled down to a serious business, although many trainees assert they are taking the pests in stride.

Joe Brown, Atlanta businessman, said he was riddled from the hips down, but "I don't mind them so much, especially when we get cooled off."

Channing Whitman, another Atlanta businessman, explained the best way to treat chiggers is to "let them eat themselves to death."

Gasoline Cure. "I haven't done anything," he said. "I've been told they'll keep on biting away until they just die."

Bill DeLoache, Columbia, S. C., flier, was trying the gasoline cure, dabbing bites with gasoline, then taking a quick bath to keep the spots from blistering.

Many were using a recommended "turpentine cure," and Herbert C. Foster, Memphis business executive, said he's already taken a bottle of turpentine.

Marion A. Collins, Augusta salesman, added most of the men were taking doses of "two or three drops" of turpentine each day.

More Firing. The third week's schedule calls for continued firing on the range, with the trainees using the new M-1 rifle (Garand), the Springfield, the Browning automatic rifle, and the service automatic pistol; drills in defense against chemical warfare; tactical problems in which blank ammunition will be fired in mock combat, and more of the drills in hiking, pitching of tents, rolling of packs, and digging field entrenchments.

Stepping up of the program came during the week with clearing weather. Practice hikes have been stretched to three and four miles, which, added to the marches required in meeting the schedule, has given the trainees approximately eight miles of brisk walking daily. The men are standing up well, and morale is high. Lights have begun to go out early in the barracks and no trainee has needed a lullaby to put him to sleep.

Bandits Get $15; 7 Watches Stolen
Two bandits held up G. A. Myers, employe of the Southern Oil Store, 620 Whitehall street, early yesterday and escaped with $15 in cash and seven watches valued at $310 were taken from the show window of Schneider & Son jewelry store, 109 Peachtree street, early yesterday.

The robber removed a small section of glass from a window of the jewelry store and took the watches.

Myers said two youths parked in front of the oil store for about 15 minutes before entering and forcing him into a restroom with revolvers while they looted the cash register. He said they were in a 1937 Ford and appeared to be about 20 years of age.

Haiti expects its present coffee crop to weigh nearly 50,000,000 pounds.

Rumania is expected to supply half of Germany's normal oil requirements.

Interesting Day Can Be Spent At State Capitol

Reporter Interviews Travelers Who Visit Building.

(Carolyn McKenzie, The Constitution's girl reporter, takes her camera and note paper into the prominent and remote sections of the city to gather news. Yesterday she spent a day at the state capitol. She snapped a few pictures of visitors, chatted with them, and they never knew just who she was. In the following article, Carolyn tells how it feels to be a traveler visiting Georgia's capitol.)

By CAROLYN MCKENZIE.

It's fun to travel in Georgia—or at least to pretend you're traveling. You can almost take a tour of the state by imagination—and you can meet other travelers and pass vacationists' conversations with them.

Yesterday morning we went over to Capitol Hill. Like other travelers, we went in to see the hostess, Mrs. Kathleen Hogan, who knows where everyone is, or should be, and what visitors should see.

First she asks visitors to register. Then they begin a sight-seeing trip. Soon after we sat down at Mrs. Hogan's desk three persons came in. Two live in Atlanta, the other was visiting from Florida. They wanted to go up into the dome.

So the four of us held our heads as we wound up the 222 steps to the top. Patsy Beau, the visiting cousin from Lakeland, seemed excited over getting far above Atlanta's streets, and young Ben Pelot was perfectly at home. He loves things like this, Miss Dorothy Kirby (not the golfer) explained.

Many faint on trip. Later we learned many persons faint on the way up, or back, and realized that holding our heads was not a bad idea after all. We decided that all Georgians should take this climb some day—just as they pull their way up on Stone Mountain. My acquaintances had made that journey the day before.

Back at Mrs. Hogan's desk, a world-worn traveler came dashing in, pulling sluggishly from his head a battered felt hat. He was just back from Cuba—a country he wants people to remind him not to go into again. This World War veteran, Martin Glensman, was on his way to his home in Cincinnati. He had his tale of woe to tell.

Sauntering through the halls, we met several persons who sat around waiting for somebody to come along or something to happen. Howard F. Tarpley and Charles T. Bailey were discussing piano tuners as they waited. They weren't travelers, but added to visitors who stopped in to see them.

Mr. Tarpley wore a button on the lapel of his coat with the number "68" on it. Of course we questioned the significance of the button to find that he wore it just for such inquisitive persons. It simply means, he said, that 68 United States citizens are disabled each minute from illness or accident.

Interested in GWTW. Patricia May Upshaw, of Tucson, Ariz., was visiting in Atlanta yesterday and wanted to brush up on Civil War history because she's very interested in "Gone With the Wind." We discussed persons we knew—and she didn't—in Tucson. Just another traveler's favorite question, possibly.

But later on we walked over to the Confederate flag and she examined it carefully. Then we got back to schools and found that she's to enter the freshman class at the University of Arizona next fall. Too bad she was not a freshman last year so we might discuss sorority ties; but her aunt was anxious to get away, anyhow. They had some luncheon or tea engagement.

Back at the office we decided that you may have a nice long day of traveling just by going over to the capitol. It's a lot of fun, too—this meeting people from all over the country and talking with them. Most of them quizzed us until we confessed that the pictures were for a newspaper; but they were glad. They wanted a travel picture to show the folks back home anyhow.

"GONE WITH THE WIND" attracted blond Patricia May Upshaw, of Tucson, Ariz., to the capitol. She wanted to brush up on Civil War relics because she's interested in the home of the great book and movie.

LOOK, THE DOME—And up they went, all 222 steps, holding their heads as they began the sightseeing trip through the capitol. Patsy Beau, center, of Lakeland, Ga., seemed excited, as did Ben Pelot. Miss Dorothy Kirby (not the golfer) is the third climber.

Garner Leaves Capitol; May Stay in Texas

Several Democrats Refuse To Support Roosevelt-Wallace Ticket.

WASHINGTON, July 20.—(AP)—Vice President Garner, foe of a third term for Franklin Roosevelt, packed away some office belongings today, expressed his private views to a few senatorial cronies and, friends said, made ready to quit the capitol. His friends said that Garner planned to go to his Uvalde, Texas, home to vote, in the primary elections of July 27, and might stay there, leaving Congress, the administration and the Democratic party to their own devices. Because of his third term views, his associates said, the 71-year-old Texan felt he could not participate in the campaign for President Roosevelt and Secretary Wallace, nominated to succeed Garner as vice president. Garner declined to say whether he had sent any congratulatory message to the President or Wallace, but friends said they understood he had not. The third-term issue had a prominent part elsewhere in the day's political developments. Former Democratic Senator James A. Reed, of Missouri, offered to join with Senator Burke, Democrat, Nebraska, in organizing Democrats opposed to a third term.

(Senator Ellison D. "Cotton Ed" Smith, South Carolina, has announced that he would not support Roosevelt for a third term, but added that he would not vote for Willie, the United Press said.)

The Harrisburg (Pa.) Patriot, published by Vance A. McCormick, former Democratic national chairman, announced its support of the Republican presidential nominee, Wendell L. Willkie.

Representative Dittler, Republican, Pennsylvania, said in a statement that "hundreds of volunteer workers" in Pennsylvania and New Jersey, including "many patriotic Democrats," had joined "in revolt against the overt threat of dictatorship as now presented in the violent overthrow of the third-term tradition by the New Deal convention at Chicago."

Wallace announced at Des Moines, Iowa, that he did not plan to resign his post as secretary of agriculture, saying that "I believe Herbert Hoover remained in the cabinet (as secretary of commerce) when he was campaigning for the presidency." Republicans, conceding that the agriculture department could exert vast political power, indicated they would make a campaign issue of Wallace's failure to resign.

In New Orleans, the split among Louisiana Democrats over Secretary Wallace's nomination widened into direct action with the announcement of David W. Pipes Jr.

that he was a Republican candidate for Congress.

Pipes, a life-long Democrat and nationally known sugar planter of Houma, was the second to announce withdrawal from the state's anciently solid Democratic ranks within 24 hours.

Charles A. Farwell, spokesman for the American Sugar Cane League, last night pinned on a "Willkie for President" button and said "the Republicans are Louisiana's only hope."

But tonight in Baton Rouge Governor Sam Jones, so outspoken at the Chicago convention in his criticism of Secretary Wallace, declared he would fight for the Democratic ticket.

"I want to tell the world I'm a Democrat," the Governor said. "I'm for Franklin D. Roosevelt for President. Any report about my being for the candidate of the utilities company is made out of whole cloth."

Meanwhile, President Roosevelt extended his Potomac river cruise as he rested from the late hours he kept during the Democratic national convention.

The chief executive left the heat of the capital Friday night on the yacht Potomac, intending at that time to be gone only 24 hours.

May See Bullitt. But, evidently enjoying the trip thoroughly, he sent word to the White House that he would not be back until Sunday.

On his return from the cruise, Mr. Roosevelt will leave by train for a visit to his home at Hyde Park, N. Y. He may be accompanied by William C. Bullitt, ambassador to France.

FDR To Revive One Tradition In Campaign

Representatives of Different Groups To Visit Him at White House.

By GLADSTONE WILLIAMS

WASHINGTON, July 20.—While overthrusting one tradition, President Roosevelt will revive another in the kind of campaign he intends to conduct this summer and fall for a third term as the nation's chief executive.

Carrying out the theme suggested in his radio acceptance speech to the Chicago convention, Mr. Roosevelt is determined to use the portico of the White House and the front porch of his Hyde Park ancestral home as the stage setting for his main campaign effort.

May Be Varied. The program may be varied later to meet the needs of the situation, but this is the present plan as it has been tentatively outlined. From time to time different groups, made up of farmers, business men, and representatives of labor, will be invited, to gather either at Washington or Hyde Park to hear the President discuss the issues of the campaign.

Such a front porch campaign, employed many times in the political history of the country, was last used by Warren G. Harding, who was elected to the presidency in 1920.

Because of the uncertainty of European war developments and the wide scope of our national defense program the President feels that he should remain close to Washington for the next few months, making himself immediately available for any decision involving our foreign policy.

Let People Decide. Over and above this, however, he apparently has adopted an attitude of leaving it for the country to decide without the pressure of the usual political ballyhoo whether he is to be drafted for a third term in violation of the traditional two-term rule. That is to say, it is his purpose to go through the campaign, in so far as possible, much in the manner he has lived for the past year, leaving it to Secretary of Agriculture Wallace, the Democratic vice presidential nominee, and the regular party organization to bear the brunt of the campaign effort.

Wendell L. Willkie, the Republican presidential candidate, on the other hand, is expected to pursue the opposite course. The fact that he is a comparatively newcomer to the field of national politics naturally will compel him to follow the customary procedure of making as many appearances and visiting as many states as possible between now and the date of the election in November. Moreover, Mr. Willkie's chances of success admittedly depend largely on his ability to sell himself and his vigorous personality to the country. In order to do that he must be seen and heard.

May Make Sweep. Mr. Roosevelt undoubtedly feels that the requirements on this score are not so great in his case. The most traveled President of all time, he has made any number of trips across the country during the seven years he has occupied the White House, and his policies and New Deal program are too well known to suggest the need of a campaign of enlightenment.

Nevertheless, while adhering to the front porch idea, it cannot be written off entirely that he may not make a sweep of the country during the closing weeks of the campaign. Master political strategist that he is, Mr. Roosevelt is known to be a believer in the greater effectiveness of a short campaign. To one of his advisors recently he confided a lesson on this point which he said he had learned from former Governor Al Smith, of New York.

Smith had always insisted that a short campaign was more conducive to success, particularly when the candidate was seeking re-election and therefore already well known.

Shares Confidence. The fact that Mr. Roosevelt is adopting the front porch and portico campaign method is taken to mean that he shares the confidence of party leaders in the ability of the Democratic ticket to win handily in November. Otherwise he would be laying plans for a more vigorous personal effort.

Despite some of the animosities which developed on the surface at the Chicago convention in the fight over the vice presidential nomination, Democratic leaders returning to Washington from the conclaves are confident over the unity of the party. The more they consider the ticket selected the more they are becoming convinced that it offers about the strongest combination possible to attain. Secretary Wallace, a former Republican, is recognized as having great strength with independent agricultural voters of the middle west. He will be more than an offset to the presence on the Republican ticket of Senator Charles L. McNary, of Oregon, long identified as a champion of the western farmer.

Such fights within the party are the rule more than the exception at Democratic national conventions, it is pointed out. The thousand-odd delegates having shown practical unanimity in drafting President Roosevelt for re-nomination in disregard of the controversial two-term tradition were entitled to a first-class rumpus by way of letting off steam and squaring themselves with what was expected. Those who were shouting the loudest against the Wallace candidacy at Chicago will be no less enthusiastic than the others before the campaign is well advanced, it is predicted.

With England at war, London's police have to make two pairs of trousers last two and a half years instead of 18 months, and they must wear their gloves four years instead of two.

Georgia Group Returns Home From Chicago Entrance Fee

Young Billy Dixon Brings Back State's Standard for Capitol.

Georgia's delegation to the Democratic national convention returned yesterday morning, a little groggy after four days of convention excitement.

The group, numbering 72, apparently were satisfied with their action in nominating Roosevelt for a third term, and joining in the acclaim that made Henry Wallace's nomination for vice president unanimous.

During the balloting for the vice presidential nominee, the delegation cast its 24 votes for Speaker Bankhead, of Alabama, as a gesture of courtesy to a statesman from a sister state. When Bankhead withdrew, the Georgians acclaimed Wallace.

Proudest Member. Proudest member of the group was young Billy Dixon, of Macon, appointed a page by Governor Rivers. During the great Wednesday night demonstration for Roosevelt Billy grabbed the Georgia standard and rode high around the convention hall on the shoulders of two delegates.

The standard was grabbed and affectionately kissed by Senator Alben Barkley, the presiding officer, and later autographed by Barkley, and L. W. (Chip) Robert Jr., secretary of the Democratic national executive committee.

The standard rode home on the train with Billy, considerably cluttering up a smoking room, and will be placed in the museum at the state capitol by Governor Rivers.

Another delegation member was Abit Nix, of Athens, candidate for governor. Nix expressed himself as delighted with the convention's actions and prophesied the Roosevelt-Wallace ticket would sweep the nation in November.

Go On Special Train. The delegates, wives, husbands, and a handful of interested spectators left Atlanta on a special train Saturday, July 14, and arrived in Chicago Sunday morning.

They left Chicago at 3:30 o'clock Friday afternoon on a special section of the Dixie Limited and arrived at Union Station at 9:30 yesterday morning.

Chairman of the delegation was Major Clark Howell, of Atlanta, editor and publisher of The Constitution. Governor Rivers attended as national committeeman.

$39,726 in Food Given to Needy

Surplus commodities distributed in Fulton county during the past 30 days amounted to $39,726.22, Braxwell Deen, director of the State Department of Public Welfare, announced yesterday.

Deen said Fulton county has 10,704 families certified for the receipt of commodities. The program relieves the farmer of his surplus products and at the same time gives the needy people of the state the benefit of these surpluses.

Only One U. S. Vessel Remains in Combat Zone

WASHINGTON, July 20.—(AP)—The Maritime Commission reported today that all United States merchant ships were out of the European combat zone with the exception of one vessel.

The last vessel, the commission said, was the McKeesport, now unloading supplies for the American Red Cross at the French Mediterranean port of Marseille. The McKeesport is expected to leave the Mediterranean for the United States, without cargo, some time next week.

Red Cross Still $13,338 Short Of Goal Here

Several Atlanta Firms To Complete Canvass This Week.

Atlanta's Red Cross war relief fund yesterday—the end of nine weeks of campaigning—stood at $86,661.49. Or $13,338.51 short of its $100,000 goal, P. C. McDuffie, general chairman, announced.

While it had been anticipated to close the drive yesterday, McDuffie said it will continue through this week to enable the Coca-Cola Company, Georgia Power Company, Walker Electric Company, Foremost Dairies, General Electric Supply, General Outdoor Advertising Company and more than score of other firms to complete a solicitation of employees.

McDuffie said representatives of these firms have conferred with campaign officials over the apparent failure of the drive and agreed to make the solicitation in a last-minute effort to put the city "over the top."

"The end is in sight," McDuffie said, "if every Atlantan who has not taken the opportunity to aid this humanitarian cause will do so this week."

In thanking the members of the Atlanta Variety Club for their donation of $2,641.50, McDuffie said: "Your generous and unselfish service has greatly encouraged us in our effort to raise the $100,000. If charity is to be effected, it can not be done too 'picayunishly.' That some of the money raised in this drive may aid Hitler is not a valid excuse although many have used it. We know that millions of men, women and children are in need. That is our concern in making this drive."

City To Observe Anniversary of Atlanta Battle

76 Years Ago Tomorrow Guns Boomed To Open Fierce Encounter.

By HAROLD MARTIN.

Tomorrow morning at 11 o'clock at the flagpole at Five Points Atlanta will pause to remember that sunny July morning 76 years ago when at this same hour cannon began their deep booming to the east of the town and the fiercest battle of all the engagements around Atlanta was begun.

There is no better way to describe that July 22, 1864, than in the words of the lecture of the guides at the Cyclorama, the great painting which makes its fury and horror live again in the minds of all who see it.

Written by the historian-artist Wilbur Kurtz, delivered many times each day by James Hall and Jack Bailey before the great painting in Grant park, it tells a story that is known to thousands from throughout the country who have made a pilgrimage to the Cyclorama.

In shadowy darkness the voice of the lecturer begins: "Before you lies the mighty drama of the Battle of Atlanta, fought 2 1/2 miles east of the city on the afternoon of July 22, 1864. This was one of the four major battles fought near Atlanta during the summer of that year, and was, in the number of men engaged and the duration of the conflict, the greatest single engagement of the Atlanta campaign."

"Events leading up to the battle are briefly as follows: The federal army under command of General William T. Sherman consisted of three grand divisions, the Army of the Cumberland, under Thomas; the Army of Tennessee, under McPherson; and the Army of Ohio, under Schofield, 100,000 men in all.

Commanded by Johnston. "Opposed to this army was the Confederate army under command of General Joseph E. Johnston. This army, which spent the winter in Dalton, Ga., consisted of three infantry corps, and during the engagement around Atlanta, of 55,000 men of the Georgia militia.

"The Federal armies began their movement toward Atlanta on May 7, 1864, at Tunnel Hill, Ga., 107 miles north of Atlanta on the old Western & Atlantic railroad.

"Continuous fighting marked the southward progress of the opposing forces. At Kennesaw mountain during June the Confederate army, outnumbered and outflanked, held Sherman at bay for 25 days, retreating only when the Sherman right wing extended south of the famous mountain.

"Closely following the retreating Confederates, Sherman, with little opposition, moved his forces over the Chattahoochee river to the north Fulton county side, a crossing which caused Johnston to withdraw to a position on the south side of the river on the night of July 9.

"On July 17, two critical events transpired: Sherman began his move on Atlanta, and General Johnston was relieved of command of the Confederate army and General John B. Hood was appointed to succeed him.

"General Sherman advanced upon Atlanta from the Chattahoochee river to Stone Mountain. Thomas' troops closed in from the north, Schofield's from the northeast, and McPherson's army advanced from the east, seized Decatur, six miles east of Atlanta, and destroyed the Georgia railroad from Decatur to Stone Mountain, cutting off Hood's supplies.

"On July 20 General Hood attacked the Cumberland army near Peachtree creek, but failed to dislodge it. On the same day, McPherson's troops drove General Joe Wheeler's cavalry from Decatur to Bald Hill, in east Atlanta, from which point Cleburne's division was dislodged on July 21. Be set on two fronts, Hood ordered an attack on the front and rear of McPherson's army in east Atlanta and to this end sent General Hardee's corps and Wheeler's cavalry on a night march of 15 miles to the rear of the Federal forces. That engagement is the subject of this canvas."

Most Dramatic Painting.
The lights come up and there before the audience lies the most dramatic painting in the world—the closing episode of the day-long terror and fury that was the Battle of Atlanta.

The onlooker stands upon a platform high above the scene, his point of view that of where Moreland avenue crosses the Georgia railroad, looking westward toward the slim church spires of the city.

The Georgia railroad, from Augusta to Atlanta, cuts through the foreground to the right. The red hills lie under a yellow sun. White clouds drift above beneath a canopy of blue. Near the ground white puffs of cannon smoke are the counterparts of the drifting clouds. The lecturer's voice goes on, his flashlight beam throwing an arrow of light on each point as he talks.

"The white house, in the middle distance is the home of Mrs. Pope. It stood on DeKalb avenue, just east of Hurt street. The large red brick house is the Troup Hurt home on the Hurt plantation. It was begun in 1862. It was never finished. It stood where the little Rock church now stands on DeGress avenue. To the right of the house are the guns of the Federal DeGress battery, abandoned by the gunners when this section of the Federal line was captured. The road in front of the house is now DeKalb avenue, and the railroad cut, once a conspicuous landmark, has been removed.

"Near the house, still aloft in the trees, is a Federal signal flag where, during the forenoon, the Federal signal officers had a station.

"The troops toward the onlooker from the house are the Confederate regiments of Manigault's Brigade of Hinnant's Division, Cheatham's Corps. Two hours before the time of the scene depicted the left of Cheatham's line advanced from the city fortifications, and Manigault's Brigade, following the railroad, struck Morgan L. Smith's Division of the Federal Fifteenth Corps, astride the railroad cut near the Hurt house.

"They broke the line, and there they lie, behind the cotton-bale rages. Dimly seen through the smoke, an ambulance in the yard of the house bears all that is mortal of General James McPherson, just brought from the battlefield in East Atlanta where he was slain by Cleburn's skirmishers.

(The bullet that killed McPherson lies in a glass case in the Cyclorama museum—Fort McPherson bears the name of the Federal general who knew and loved the south.)

"To the left of the little bridge is Colonel Augustus Mery, plunging dead from the back of his dying horse as it falls. The astonished officer to the left who sees him fall is Colonel R. N. Adams of the 81st Ohio, who took command of the brigade.

General Fought Then.
"Riding hard, to command the counter-attack, comes General John A. Logan, of Illinois, commanding the Tennessee Army since McPherson's death.

"He pushes his black horse into the thick of it, for in this war generals fought on the field with their men.

"Behind him comes Captain Francis DeGress, whose battery was captured, pistol in hand, and going past them, back to the rear, the ambulance that bears the wounded General Force, shot through the face. His son rides beside him, talking.

"High above it all soars Old Abe, eagle mascot of a Wisconsin regiment, who followed his master wherever the fighting took him.

"Rising above the horizon to the east is the dome of Stone mountain, and to its right the smoke of the battle that rages in the Decatur public square where fiercely, again and again, Fighting Joe Wheeler's cavalry assaults the Federal wagon trains.

"And here along the winding dusty road to Decatur moves the backwash of the battle, ambulances trundling to the rear with a bloody drip, drip, drip from their shattered cargo, walking wounded hobbling back, and toward them and beside them the ammunition wagons moving up.

"And here another Federal force advances to repair the shattered line, those left living of Lightburn's brigade of Smith's division, with Lightburn himself on his sore horse leading them back to the fight. They are the men who were driven out of their lines at the Hurt house under the fierce assault of Manigault's brigade. Out of the woods where they have sought shelter they come, moving at the double across a field of wheat, furiously returning to the lines from which they were earlier driven.

"Behind them rumble the guns of an Iowa and Illinois battery. They too were driven back when Cheatham's men broke the line, but now from behind the hill by the old stone tannery, they thunder back into battle.

Look to the South.
"Look to the south. On the bare hilltop, surging toward the edge of the woods, is seen the right division of Cheatham's corps. Up the slope of Leggett's hill charge the serried gray lines of Stevenson's men, hurling themselves against the blazing front of Leggett's division. Men from Tennessee, Alabama, North Carolina and Georgia, veterans of the fighting from Chattanooga down, time and again they hurled themselves up this reddened slope, only to be swept back by the rattling musketry and artillery fire of the 17th Corps.

"Three Confederate divisions hurled their strength against that hill, and, as Pickett failed at Gettysburg, they failed."

"And so, with but a little more, the battle of Atlanta is done, the lights go up, and those who have watched stand dazed and staring. They have lived for a little while amid the terror and the fury of a battle long ago.

Tomorrow, Atlanta will remember, as Mayor Hartsfield calls for the observance of another "Memory Day."

A red Confederate battle flag will rise on the standard at Five Points. Beside it will fly the Stars and Stripes. Mrs. Thomas J. Ripley, president of the Atlanta chapter of the Daughters of the Confederacy, will lead the salute to the flag of the Lost Cause. Mrs. C. U. Sheehan will lead the pledge to the national flag. Barbara Nell Christian, Frances and Florine Stewart will play "Dixie."

Then, at the notes of "Taps," the Stars and Bars will come down.

Lack of Facilities Costs Lives of 853

Typhoid fever, diphtheria and malaria took an unnecessary toll of 853 lives in Georgia over the past 10 years due to lack of public health facilities, State Department of Health authorities claimed yesterday.

"The average death rate for typhoid was 35.6 per cent higher in the remainder of the state than in counties where health departments were maintained," said Dr.

T. F. Abercrombie, state health director.

"The diphtheria rate was 13.9 per cent higher, and the malaria rate was 8.6 per cent higher. In other words, if the entire state had had the same death rate from these diseases during the 10-year period as did the health officer counties there would have been a saving of 853 lives."

Jennings Gordon Defeats Arnold Blum, 2-1, for State Golf Title

Sirocco Wins At Arlington; Bimelech 3d

13-to-1 Shot Finishes Seventh Lengths Ahead of Gallahadion.

CHICAGO, July 20.—(P)—The $50,000 Arlington classic, graveyard of champions, produced another stunning upset today when the bay gelding, Sirocco, captured the event at odds of 13 to 1.

Bimelech, potential 1940 three-year-old champion, went to the post at odds of 3-to-5 and could do no better than third, three lengths behind Gallahadion, winner of the Kentucky Derby which finished second, seven lengths back of the flying Sirocco, owned by Charles T. Fisher, Detroit automobile body manufacturer.

CROWD STUNNED.

Sirocco, which never won a stake previously as a three-year-old, won so easily that the crowd of 35,000 was stunned.

He paid $28.20 to win, $8.20 to place and $2.80 to show. The prices on Gallahadion, owned by Mrs. Ethel V. Mars, Chicago, were $4.40 and $2.60. Bimelech, the prize thoroughbred of 80-year-old Colonel E. R. Bradley, returned $2.20 to show.

The field of six was well strung out in the final dash to the wire. Eight lengths back of Bimelech in fourth place was Arnold Hanger's Dit, another 10 lengths away was A. C. Ernst's Alhalon and the Millsdale's Stable's erratic Andy K was last, five lengths behind Alhalon.

There was little actual drama in the final sixteenth for Sirocco. With Jockey George Woolf on his back, he came romping home all by himself. But until Sirocco bounded out of fourth position to conquer the leading Bimelech and Gallahadion there was plenty of excitement.

After a quick start Andy K, which sometimes forgets to run in a straight line, bounded out in front, showing the way to Bimelech as he passed the cheering spectators. Then Andy K began bearing out near the first turn and try as hard as he could, Jockey Jack Richard could not straighten him out until the rest of the field was rounding the turn.

ANDY K LAST.

Andy K ran sixth and last in the field all the way. On the back stretch, Dit took the lead, followed by Bimelech with Gallahadion and Sirocco trailing, and the crowd began to wonder when Bimelech would make his challenge. Moving together Gallahadion and Sirocco came up on the outside. The crowd looked on tensely as the Bradley colt tried to keep the lead, but he faltered. He was all through coming into the stretch turn, where Sirocco was on the outside and Gallahadion was closer to the rail.

For an instant Sirocco swerved to the inside sharply as he displaced Gallahadion from the lead. Carroll Bierman took up Gallahadion, then sent him after the flying Sirocco.

Sirocco continued powerfully to win easily, while Gallahadion tired but held second place safely. Alhalon and Andy K were never in the race, and Dit just for three quarters.

Big Flash Wins Hollywood Derby.

INGLEWOOD, Cal., July 20.—(UP)—Big Flash, carrying 114 pounds and ridden by Jockey Eugene Rodriguez, today won the $25,000 added Hollywood Derby at Hollywood park. Weigh Anchor was second and Sweepida third. Midland ran fourth.

Big Flash paid $17.40 to win, $6.80 and $4.60. Weigh Anchor paid $6.40 and $3.60 and Sweepida $3.60.

Pepperell Nine, Simmons Play Monday Night

Lindale's Pepperells, Textile League leaders and favorite in the Georgia state semi-pro tournament being conducted in Tubize park at Rome, go into action against Manager Estes' Simmons Bed Company team Monday night.

Some of Atlanta's finest baseball talent has been moulded into the Simmons baseball machine and the Atlanta club is expected to provide Lindale with a full evening of fireworks.

Georgia's record-breaking rain for July has tossed the tournament schedule all out of gear. The tournament, supposed to open July 8, has been able to play but one game and that between the defending championship Tubize team and Atlanta Gas Company. Tubize was forced to come from behind to win, 8 to 6, last Wednesday. The Atlanta team sparked by Belcher, Dillingham, Dodgen, Hasty and Otis Fuller came within a whisker of pushing Tubize into tournament oblivion for the current season.

In what promises to be one of the best games of the entire tournament Anchor Duck, of Rome, runs into Goodyear, of Atco, Tuesday night.

The victor in the Lindale-Simmons game Monday night returns to action again Wednesday night against Rockmart. Rockmart advanced to the semi-finals on a forfeit from U. S. Cafe, of Dalton.

SIROCCO WINS BY SEVEN LENGTHS—Sirocco, 13 to 1 in the wagering, is shown easily winning the $50,000-added Arlington Classic by seven lengths. Gallahadion, which took second, and the favored Bimelech, which was third, are partly obscured by the finish pole. The remainder of the field, Dit, Alhalon and Andy K, finished in that order, far back. Sirocco ran the mile and a quarter in 2:03.

Kirby Leaves For Asheville Meet Today

Louise Suggs Also To Play in Biltmore Forest Golf Tourney.

By DOROTHY KIRBY.

Well, the time has come around again for the Biltmore Forest golf tournament. In fact it gets under way on Tuesday.

For some reason or other this event is usually won by Jane Cothran, she just seems to be able to handle the course better than anyone else. However, they say everything has an ending. So, since I have gotten to the final round twice and lost both times I am hoping that this year will be better than the last.

I am heading for Asheville this morning. There are quite a few Atlanta golfers going up. The best one among them being the state champion, Louise Suggs. Louise was there last year also, and we two had to play a match which I barely won from her. Atlanta will be well accounted for anyway.

The tournament always draws a fine crowd, and also some good golfers. Besides Jane Cothran, Kathryn Hemphill and Marion Miley usually attend. Augusta is also being represented with Eileen Stubb coming up. Eileen played in the state and did quite well. She is one of the coming golfers around here. I know it will be a good tournament and I am looking forward to being there.

Harold Weinkle Bowling Winner

Harold Weinkle won the A. Z. A. bowling tournament that was staged on the downtown alleys last week as he turned in a combined total of 208 for his two games, with counts of 100 and 108 included in the total.

Charles Weiner had games of 96 and 95, Walter Strauss games of 94 and 83, Simon Glustrom 87 and 87, Stanford Makover 74 and 98, Harold Yudelson 87 and 83.

Hillman Closest At Bobby Jones.

Seventy was the winning number in the blind bogey golf tournament at Bobby Jones yesterday, but nobody had it. Arthur Hillman scored a 71 to come closest.

W. A. Molster, Mark Balser and James R. Atwill had 72's.

Atlanta Women in Sport

Ann Thornton Has Won More Than a Hundred Silver Cups and Blue Ribbons for Horsemanship.

By CAROLYN MATTHEWS.

The name of Ann Thornton is well associated with riding ability and real sportsmanship. She's known, too, for her practice of bringing home silver cups and blue ribbons—over a hundred—when she participates in children's riding events over the country. And when she gets one of her rare red ribbons for placing second, she's just as proud of it. No wonder her poise and unspoiled, matter-of-fact ways win so many friends.

Ann, being just 13, is among the very young equestriennes, having started this career at the tender age of two years! That was when her father, Dr. Lawson Thornton, first took her to Piedmont park to look at the ponies. And two years later she possessed a pet pony of her own and started taking riding lessons from Fenton Dye. Later, Mrs. Wilshire Riley coached her.

POWDER PUFF. After the first ill-fated little fellow, in close succession, came Prince, Peewee and Goldlocks, all of them predecessors of Powder Puff, the blooded three-gaited pony that Ann has ridden for the last eight years. Beloved Powder Puff, the dark-gray champion, won the saddle pony stake at the Chicago World's Fair, and was purchased from T. K. Simmons, of Tulsa, Okla.

Powder Puff has helped Ann win most of her honors. They have entered shows here in Atlanta, Indianapolis, Devon and Sewickley, Pa., North Carolina, Spring Lake, New Jersey, and Harrodsburg, Louisville and Shelbyville, Ky. In all of these places Ann's ability has been praised as outstanding in children's horsemanship, and Powder Puff has annexed his share of ribbons for superb showing.

THIRD VICTORY. The American Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Animals sponsors a Good Hands event which Ann recently won for the third time. This entitles her to keep the local cup and gives her the privilege of participating in the National Horse Show held in November at Madison Square Garden, New York.

Winning the Good Hands event means scoring in horsemanship, good form, and the proper, gentle, and kindly handling of the horse. Good form includes sitting properly (in the middle of the saddle) elbows at rest, hand quiet or moving easily with the horse's head, feet still, and knees snugly gripping the horse's side.

Besides Powder Puff, the show-trained animal, there is Pinto, the trail pony. It is Pinto that Ann mounts every morning when she and her father take their hour's ride. This daily gallop-about comes at 6:30 except Sunday, when it's 7, and the same program goes on during the school year.

VERSATILE ATHLETE. Ann isn't the least one-sided in her taste for sports. There's badminton and there's tennis, which she confesses not to play so well, baseball, touch-football, and time spent swimming in the Fritz Orr pool. She steadfastly continues to prefer swimming under water like a fish instead of above board. And for this reason, Ann's mother often accuses her, unjustly, according to Ann, of staying in too long. Because, as she explains, "even fifteen minutes in the water, and I come up with red eyes." But, apparently, she loves it just the same.

Next year, young Miss Thornton will be a freshman in the high school division at Washington Seminary, and she plans to go out for basketball. Being in the ninth grade makes her eligible.

Just now, to be sure, she is a bit young to consider definitely any kind of a future career. All she can say about her equestrienne ability is that she would like very much to keep it as a hobby and maybe give riding lessons some day as a kind of sideline. A business career seems very much in the offing for the immediate future; for Ann Thornton is a very self-reliant young lady.

JOCKEY INJURED.

CLEVELAND, July 20.—(P)—A three-horse spill during the fourth race at Thistledown track today sent Jockey Andy Bomar, of East St. Louis, Ill., to a hospital with a fractured collar bone and hip injuries. Riders of the other mounts were shaken up but not badly hurt.

Dempsey, Fed Up On Wrestlers, Declares Next Fight Is His Last

By JACK CUDDY.

NEW YORK, July 20.—(UP)—Jack Dempsey, recovering from a wrenched back and injured ear, is completely fed up with wrestling and has declared that he will not wrestle again.

Unfortunately the old Manassa Mauler is under contract to fight one more grapple in a certain southern city, and he fears he'll be forced to go through with it. The contract was made before his unpleasant experience with Bull Curry at Detroit Monday night when both fell out of the ring and landed upon the boxing commissioner.

Dempsey says, "If I have to go through with that contract for the southern city—okay. But I'll guarantee you that I'll be the last wrestler I ever fight. Those wrestlers would doublecross their own mothers. They assure you they'll make a fight of it—and not wrestle. But the minute the bell rings, they're using headlocks, flying tackles and everything else."

Jack, still denying that a reported need of cash actuated his return to the ring, says he may take on some fourth-rate heavyweight boxers instead of wrestlers soon.

"At least I'd know what to expect from them," he says, ten-day meeting.

thing physical. "I'm restless. I've got a lot of things on my mind, and I've got to blow off steam some way."

'Pay Cut' Expected At Ansley Park

By JOHNNY BRADBERRY.

Practically every day some guy wants to know what the South-eastern Conference football czar is going to do about the players who are now on college pay rolls but are getting more than will be allowed after he takes office. There are only two things that can happen:

Blake Winner In Blind Bogey At Ansley Park

Five Share Honors At Druid Hills.

Five shared first prize in the Druid Hills blind bogey tournament yesterday. J. H. Ewing, Don Lambert, Dave Griffith, J. C. Shumate and Harry Boling all had 75—the winning number.

With 74's were H. H. Ellison, Gordon Freeman, W. H. Hester and C. D. Guerry, while G. L. Dougherty, Henry Barbour, Ralph Black and W. H. Methvin came in with 76's.

Four players were low at 71. They were C. B. Nunnally, E. B. Adams, Roy Martin and Ed Pierce. High at 73 was C. A. Rauchenberg. J. L. Respress was closest to the third hole.

Roman's Rally At 27th Wins Over Maconite

Shot on 12th Hole of Second Round Tells Story.

By AL SHARP.

MACON, Ga., July 20.—Jennings Gordon, 31-year-old Rome player, won four of the last eight holes here this afternoon to beat Arnold Blum, hometown favorite 2 and 1, in the finals of the Georgia State Amateur golf tournament.

After playing poor golf on the front nine in the afternoon, Gordon reached into thin air and came up with par down the stretch to stop the 18-year-old University of Georgia student. It was an unusual match. The played like anything but champions on the first nine both times, but when they got to the back side of this tricky par-70 layout things happened.

38'S GOING OUT. In the morning round of the 36-hole affair, both shot 4-over par 39's on the first nine to start all square. Then Gordon scored three birdies in a row from two feet, four feet and 27 feet to two-up through the 12th hole.

He finished the back nine 1 one-under-par 34, with Gordon one-up at lunch. (Gordon conceded a birdie putt after taking bogey 5 to make the scores even.)

Then Blum fired another four-over-par 39 in the afternoon and Gordon soared to 42, while Blum 2 up at the end of 27 holes. Gordon got even with a par

THE CARDS.

Morning Round	Afternoon Round

Gordon 43	336 444-39
Blum 44	445 445-39

Gordon 44	332 445-34
Blum 45	340 445-34
Gordon out 34	345 445-42

at the 10th or 28th and a par at the 12th, but it was not as easy as it sounds. In fact, the match hinged, as far as I am concerned, on one shot, as matches have a habit of doing.

Anyway, Gordon was down the middle, on the green and in the cup in two putts on the 10th hole. He sliced his drive into the rough, hit a beauty that found the green and then three-putted. Blum missed a 4-foot putt there.

He lost that one and was still one up. Then came the shot that told the tale. It happened on the 12th or 30th hole after they had halved the 11th. In bogey 5 Blum also missed a 4-foot putt of the 11th hole.

WON ON 12TH. Now for the 12th hole, when the match was won. Gordon sent his tee shot into this 164-yard hole into the trap just off the right of the green. Blum did not hit a good shot, but he was on the edge of the green. It looked as if Blum was going to take that hole to a 2 up again.

Then Jenny came through. He blasted the ball next to the stick. It was enough to chill anyone. Out of the trap he had come with a shot so close, it was a kickaway. Gordon shot first, you see, and that shot put the pressure square on Blum. He missed his putt. Let it be said right now that Arnold did not let the pressure get him. He chipped his ball past the cup.

But Blum was four feet past the cup. He had just missed two four-foot putts in a row. That did not help him a bit. His putting confidence had been shaken. He missed that putt on the 12th hole. Gordon won 2 and 1.

They halved the 13th in birdies. Gordon laying his pitch five inches from the pin and Blum getting down an eight-foot putt which he had coming after missing those three four-foot putts in a row.

They halved the 14th in par 4's. GORDON GETS BIRDIE. A drive to the 15th was within hitting distance of a tree. He hit the tree. With a sure will in par 5, Gordon dropped a 15-foot birdie putt after Arnold reached the green in four and missed his par putt.

One down with three to go. Blum hooked his second shot into the woods on the 16th. Gordon hit the green. Blum failed to get up and down, and Gordon sank it two putts to be two up with two to go.

Gordon played the 17th safe. Blum's tee shot failed to slice around the trees. It went straight into the woods on the other side of the fairway. Arnold played a magnificent recovery closer to the green than Gordon. But they halved the hole in 5's and that was the match.

Kirby Among Favorites for Berg's Crown

By DILLON GRAHAM.

Now that Patty Berg has deserted the amateur ranks, three girls who have seriously threatened for several years may be hard to stop in the 1940 national women's golf championship at Pebble Beach, Cal., in September.

They're Marion Miley, of Lexington, Ky.; Charlotte Glutting, of Rock Springs, N. J., and Dorothy Kirby, of Atlanta, Ga.

The Kentuckian has played in seven nationals, reaching the semi-finals twice and the quarter-finals once. Miss Glutting has been almost as dangerous. Last year she was beaten in the semi-finals by Miss Kirby, who will be a big threat at Pebble Beach. She was beaten in the 1940 finals by Betty Jameson, of San Antonio.

Miss Jameson, just 21, is at the top of her game, as she

Too Many Fish Anglers Keep 'Em Alive

By MELVIN PAZOL.

You've no doubt heard of anglers taking more fish than they needed, and you have also probably heard of instances of "throwing them back."

But the case of two American anglers, Buster McGarrath and Arthur Slappey, deserves special notice. This pair, fishing at Lake Blackshear, backwater of the Flint river power dam, caught so many they kept "about 40 pounds" of fish alive, hidden in boxes, just in case the finny tribe should cease to bite at a moment's notice.

McGarrath and Slappey also deserve praise on the conservation angle. Many a fisherman hauls out more than he can ever use, and just lets most of them die on the banks in useless waste.

They had all they wanted to eat; sent plenty to friends at home, and played host to friends here at fish fries. The largest laker weighed four pounds, and they caught plenty of bream, perch and channel cat. Rainy weather did not seem to hamper them.

LORD MAKES PROGRESS.

Ranger Earl Lord, at Valdosta, has been notified to submit plans to the United States Engineering Department at Jacksonville, in regard to low check dams across the Withlacoochee river to protect fish during periods of low water. Lord has received approval of property owners along the proposed construction route. He will go to Jacksonville this week.

HUCK COPS CROWN.

Notice that grim look of determination on the countenance of C. H. Huck, Atlanta's champion all-around fly and bait caster. Maybe that's why he won the title. At any rate, Huck out-cast all competitors in the Atlanta Fly and Bait Casting Club's tournament last week at Piedmont Park. He's the champ now.

REMARKABLE BIRD.

The water ouzel shown on this page takes the prize for all-around adaptability. This rare bird is at home in the air, on land, or under water! And it is also a sweet singer. The male and female are alike in coloration (slate)—one of the few cases where this is true among birds. His nest of soft moss is kept alive and growing.

ATLANTAN QUALIFIES.

D. F. Adderhold, of Atlanta, has qualified for membership in the Flying Fishermen Club. Adderhold caught a 122-pound, eight-ounce tarpon, measuring six feet, four inches in length, in waters off Boca Grande Pass, Florida.

Complying with a club membership requirement, Adderhold traveled by plane to the Florida fishing grounds.

W. P. A. Offers To Co-operate In Construction

Counties Expected To Grab at Plan; State Will Stock Lakes.

By JOHN MARTIN.

The endless search for "a good fishing hole" may be nearing an end. It will end within five years if Georgians are willing to take up the invitation, or challenge, issued yesterday by R. L. McDougall, state WPA administrator.

McDougall was talking about skilled and unskilled labor and fishing and fishponds when he revealed that his agency would co-operate with Georgia counties in a campaign that might easily come close to bringing a "bass and a bream in every backyard."

That perhaps is stretching it somewhat, but the fact is that the WPA is willing, and is in a position to put out on a statewide project of fishpond construction.

READY TO START. "We are ready to begin work immediately," McDougall declared, "on building of fish ponds in any county in Georgia where we have facilities—and this means nearly all of them."

He pointed out that the WPA would supply three-fourths of the labor and costs—three dollars from the WPA to one dollar from the county.

"This would not only help provide an abundance of fishing areas," he explained, "but also would contribute valuable tourist attractions as well as recreation centers and picnicking grounds."

Charlie Elliott, director of the Wild Life Division, was enthusiastic over the proposal. He expressed the hope that counties would grab the opportunity and said that the Wild Life Division would exert every effort toward stocking the ponds.

COUNTIES TO AID. He urged all counties and municipalities interested in building small lakes or ponds in collaboration with the WPA to write the Wild Life Division. Heavy and quick response would expedite the execution of the project.

It is the plan of the WPA, McDougall said, to build the "very best" type of dams. Property already owned by counties, or new sites either purchased or donated, would be used. Take a tip from an old fisherman, you county whippersnappers, get your name down on the list—and do it in a hurry. This program bears the earmarks of anything but malarkey.

ATLANTANS SHOOT.

ASHEVILLE, N. C., July 20.—The $5,000 Land of the Sky national open skeet shoot will be held in Asheville from July 31 through August 3. Approximately 300 marksmen are scheduled to compete over the newly completed championship range. Asheville plans to make the tournament an annual affair. Robert and Roy Reagan and Clyde King are entered from Atlanta.

idea and now pursues the pests on her own.

THE ANSWER—The water ouzel, also known as dipper. Of this family he is the lone member in the United States, being native to the Rockies and the mountains of California. In size he is about that of a robin. He is as much at home under the water as other birds are in the air, his principal item of food being the insects which live below the surface of the water. The water ouzel can walk on the bottom of a stream with swift water flowing over his head. It is claimed he can fly under water, using his wings as he does in the air. His nest is always near the water, generally close to waterfall, and, in many instances, behind it where he has to go through a curtain of falling water to make his exit.

FISHING

By NATE S. NOBLE.

Fresh water black bass fishing is probably America's grandest sport. Trout rods whip streams from coast to coast and from Canada to Georgia's northern streams, but when you talk about black bass, you are talking the language most fishermen know best.

There's a reason, of course; and for millions of Ike Waltons to think and dream and cast all during the eight or nine months' bass season for these fighting bronze-backed warriors, there must be a mighty good one.

Now the best reason I know is that when you find real black bass water, you can play and fight and struggle with, land and lose and return America's greatest fresh water game fish.

And I have found the best black bass water any angler ever dreamed of.

In a westerly direction from Eau Gallie, Fla., about 20 miles into the back of beyond, where cottonwoods, rattlers and cabbage palms hold sway as in days before the white man, the upper reaches of the St. Johns river are alive with big-mouth black bass running from a pound to 10 and 12 or more.

ALIVE WITH BASS.

When I say ALIVE, I mean just that. Bass explode near the boat, they break water in front and astern, they splash among the lily pads and thick aquatic cover on either side. It was Paradise enow. See the snapshot of the couple of medium-sized bronze-backed fighters. Mrs. Naomi Forrest says they weighed about six pounds each. I suspect it was more. And they fight. The two and three pounders can be brought to the boat fairly easily. But the bigger ones are smarter. That's why they have lived to test the skill of the best angler.

Turtle Mound, the property of Perry Forrest, is on the St. Johns. One need only shove off in a small boat, poling or rowing or equipped with a small, weedless kicker. Bass are everywhere. They bite for an hour or so. Then lay off for a while. But soon are rising again. I caught bass in the hot sun. I caught them early in the morning. And I caught them as the sun was dropping below the palm-fringed horizon.

Water can offer the most beautiful vista man ever dreamed of. And here on the St. Johns, not far from its source above Lake Helen Blazes, is black bass water such as can be found in few places in the world. Did I hear someone say Lake Apopka or Harris, or Thousand Islands? Try the upper St. Johns and, my friends, you will live forever after with memories a hundred years of angling cannot duplicate.

U. S. HIGHWAY NO. 1.

To get there, drive down No. 1 from Jacksonville to Eau Gallie. It's four miles north of Melbourne on the Indian river. Ask anyone in Eau Gallie where to find Perry Forrest. He has a place on No. 1 in the heart of the town.

Turtle Mound is an Indian mound. It is above the high-water mark of the St. Johns. I saw turtles come there to lay their eggs. Amateur archeologists dig up bits of pottery and bone. Tall cabbage palms offer shade in the heat of the day and make delicious salads. Nights are cool and you will need cover happily at hand. And few mosquitoes. I was not bothered once, either at the mound or on the river. But it was the only place on the East Coast where I escaped them.

Here is an angler's heaven. So let's keep it that way. No bass under two pounds should be kept. It is not necessary. Bigger ones are there for you. Get a Florida nonresident 10-day fishing license. It costs $2.25 and is worth much more. Eight bass is a day's creel in Brevard county. So play the game, and tight lines!

Rabid Foxes Cause Alarm Over Georgia

U. S., State, Rockefeller Foundation Investigating Epidemic.

Rabid foxes in Burke, Jefferson and Jenkins counties have caused widespread alarm among followers of the midnight chase all over Georgia.

Following reports of foxes attacking persons and live stock in this section hunters fear spread of rabies into all parts of the state. This is one of the chief outdoor problems of the moment, according to the division of wild life, inasmuch as it threatens one of Georgia's oldest and popular outdoor sports. It has no precedent in American wild life annals, observers say.

Walker T. Harrod, representing the biological survey and the wild life division, has gone to Burke county, equipped with 150 traps, and is capturing foxes in a section hardest hit by mad animals.

The Rockefeller Foundation will study the heads of the animals and the biological survey will examine the stomachs. This is no attempt to exterminate the fox, but merely action taken at the request of the State Board of Health to protect them and fox hunting as a sport.

Last week a fox attacked Joseph Dunn, a Louisville farmer, in a plowed field. Dunn escaped by jumping into his wagon. However, two of his mules were bitten. Several cows have died in Burke county from rabies believed to have been spread by the foxes.

John P. Moore, Negro farmer living near Waynesboro, engaged in a bitter struggle with a mad fox which attacked him on the road early this month. He choked the animal and finally beat it to death on the asphalt.

Hunters not only fear for the population of the fox, but for the safety of their dogs, any number of which might be bitten during a chase.

Atlantan Gets Large Catch At Carrabelle

CARRABELLE, Fla., July 20.—While the rains have held up the fresh water fishing, the bay and deep water catches have been unusually large. Dr. Cooley and party from Chattanooga, and W. K. Murdock, of Atlanta, fishing from the pleasure craft Ranger, with Captain Edmund Chipman have caught more than 600 pounds of grouper, grunts and speckle trout.

A. E. Speer, president of the Bank of Ochlocknee, and Mrs. F. E. Alverson, with their families sandwiched in surf bathing with bay fishing for speckle trout. They report real sport and many fish.

The story of the week goes to Martin Bowen, local commercial fisherman. A 97-pound turtle tried the same stunt that "Brer Rabbit" used in Uncle Remus stories. With one front flipper he slapped a hook. No one knows what he said, but with the other flipper he slapped the next hook suspended from a trot line; and there he was for Martin to bring ashore.

State Classifies Fairy Shrimp As Livestock

Shrimp generally are known as small crustaceans, including some amphipods and certain entomotracans, but according to the State Auditing Department they're livestock.

At least a quart of fairy shrimp imported from New York last spring are swimming in north Georgia streams under that classification.

Mrs. Herman Smith, bookkeeper in the wild life division, was classifying the accounts payable when she ran into the shrimp problem. She thumbed the book-let on budgetary and accounting classification, but could find no place for shrimp.

Whereupon she called on Ed Thrasher in the auditor's office. This was a new one for the auditor, but he solved it by throwing them in the live stock lot—with horses, mules, bovines and pigs.

VARIED SIRS.

No less than nine different stations are represented by the comparatively small group of 14 thoroughbred yearlings which Tollie Young's Creekview Farm of Kentucky will send to the Saratoga sales in August. They are Brilliant, Saxon, Gallant Sir, Burgoo, King, Agrarian, Hi-Jack, Burgoo, Heels, Good Advice and Boat-swain.

THE BORZOI—Commonly called the "Russian Wolf Hound," this specie is very fleet of foot and was formerly used in coursing or chasing and catching rabbits.

Dogs Questions, And Answers

By GEORGE BERNER.

Queries usually fall off during the summer months, but for some reason they have been particularly heavy during the past few weeks. We left them out of the column, too, for a week or two, so let's make up for that now and look at some of the more interesting ones.

Q. What should one do for a dog that has swallowed a nail or other foreign object?

A. If the dog was seen to swallow the object, feed him a meal of some bulky substance, such as bread, and then use salt on the very back of his tongue to induce vomiting. If he doesn't bring up, watch him carefully for a few days, and at the first sign of diarrhea or swollen stomach, take him to a vet.

Q. I have a Dane puppy four months old which I recently bought and paid a good price for. Recently, at a dog show, he reached for his food and water.

A. You received some very valuable advice from this Dane man. By feeding him high, he meant to place the dog's food on a stool which is high enough so that the dog will have to reach and stretch to get it. His water should also be placed so. As the dog grows, the stool should be increased in height. It is always necessary for him to stretch to get it. Keep your dog's nails short so that they don't interfere with his getting up on his toes as he reaches for his food and water.

Q. How many dogs are now recognized by the American Kennel Club, and which was the last one recognized? This is to settle an argument.

A. There are 108 breeds recognized by the A. K. C. The last to be so recognized was the American Water Spaniel.

Q. To settle a bet, will you publish in your column the name of the largest dog show in the United States? Also in the world?

A. The Morris and Essex show, held the 25th of May at Madison, N. J., is the largest dog show in the world. There were 4,000 dogs entered at this year's event.

Q. I want to get a dog for a companion. I live in a detached house, and have two teen-age children. Which breed would you advise?

A. In our opinion, the breed selected must be different. Look them over and buy the one you like. You're the one who's going to live with it, and if you spend a little time in training, an intelligent companion, you'll have a good dog, whichever breed you get. If you don't, regardless of the breed, you'll have a darned nuisance.

Q. I have a purebred Alredale, which I believe is of good type as he has won his class several times at dog shows, and once won the "winners' dog." An Alredale breeder is interested in using him as a stud. Is this a good idea?

A. Your friend's doggy knowledge is very limited. Using your dog as stud will have little if any effect on him. Use him by all means; but if anything other than a cash consideration is involved as a stud fee, get a note signed by the breeder stating the exact agreement. This will save subsequent arguments which sometimes arise.

Q. Several times in your column, you have mentioned that the very best diet for dogs is the combination of a good dry dog food and fresh meat. You've not mentioned vegetables, and I have always been told that they are very important to a dog.

A. We think vegetables very unimportant to a dog. They have little nutritional value other than some minerals and salts which most of the better commercial dog foods contain. Our dogs have never had a mouthful of vegetables, to our knowledge.

Q. I have a six-year-old dog that I love dearly, but I cannot afford even the smallest medical fee for his treatment. What can I do?

A. Take him immediately to the nearest vet, explain your position frankly, and he will gladly give your dog every attention gratis. Veterinarians are always glad to be of such service. The fellow who buries them up in to speak, is the fourflusher who demands every attention and the best of everything, and then never pays his bill.

DIXIE'S FIELDS —and— STREAMS

PARACHUTISTS BEWARE.

Fifth columnists or parachutists would find the Atlanta area an unhealthy situation, should their fantastic activities ever become a reality in America. Atlanta sportsmen are already several jumps ahead of their English cousins, judging from increased activity on Atlanta rifle ranges. The purchase of new rifles, spotting scopes, ammunition and other equipment has been greatly accelerated during the past thirty days.

Authority for this statement is none other than Ben Dillard, the popular rifle and ammunition expert at a Marietta street sporting goods store. Ben states that in the past week the run on his company's stock of .22 Hornets, .218 Bee's and heavier caliber rifles completely exhausted the supply at one time. The purchasers of these guns have, for the most part, been confined to new recruits in the rifle shooting game, and you can take it from Dillard they don't mind telling you they are giving serious thought to intense practice with these firearms in order to be better fitted for any emergency which might arise.

The most popular caliber being purchased is the .30-06, which indicates that the boys are thinking in larger terms than plinking with the small .22 rifle. Another popular firearm having heavy demands over Atlanta sporting goods counters is the ever-faithful .45-caliber automatic pistol. The purchasers of this sidearm are largely R. O. T. C. officers of National Guard members, who realize that they face a possibility of being drafted for duty, and are anxious to improve their marksmanship through the purchase and use of personally owned arms. The biggest problem facing dealers for this type of equipment is the securing of sufficient stock from arms manufacturers. Orders have been filled slower within the past few months, due no doubt to the increased national demands for firearms, and also the possibility that government orders are taking precedence over those for personal use.

Discussions resulting from theories advanced on the procedure and technique for bringing down parachutists with a rifle are quite interesting. For instance, the other afternoon some of the boys were expressing confidence in their ability to pick them out of the sky when Heinie Slayton, of the Constitution Photographic Department, who shoots with both camera and rifle, asked a real tough one. "I think," said Heinie, "that several men armed with .30/06 rifles could really create havoc with a bunch of parachutists. The main thing that would worry me is how in the dickens could you tell when you hit one and put him out of commission? He would still keep falling to earth."

"The formula there," replied Marion Jones, "would be to get him in range and pump three slugs at him. When he lands, if he is still able to walk, fair sportsmanship would demand that he have a crack at you then, anyway."

SLOCUM'S "BIG BERTHA."
W. C. Slocum, Georgia Tech engineer and well-known rifle authority, is probably heavier armed than any other Atlanta sportsman, according to Dillard. Slocum no doubt intends to be prepared for any emergency, as he has recently purchased a new .357 Magnum, which develops about as much power as anything mounted on a rifle stock. Included in his purchase was five canisters of powder, a supply of bullets, primers and everything for action except the reloading tools.

Slocum has been marking time for several days with all this new equipment while waiting for his reloading tools to arrive. Calling by the store the other afternoon to check on their arrival he was informed that the federal government had banned any further shipment on reloading tools for rifles. Slocum's remarks on hearing this sad piece of information were hardly suitable for printing, and he continued to wait until the boys informed him that they were only kidding and his reloading tools would be on hand shortly.

In all seriousness, the American nation has more expert marksmen among its every-day citizens than any other country on the face of the globe. Credit for this can be given to the thousands of organized rifle, pistol and skeet clubs throughout the nation. American sportsmen annually burn millions of rounds of rifle and shotgun ammunition in the field and on the range.

FARSIGHTED PROGRAM.
Even in times of peace the United States army has been quite active in sponsoring civilian shooting. This has been carried out through the furnishing of ammunition at cost to National Guard units and through providing rifle ranges and skeet fields on government property and army posts for the use of civilian marksmen. In the event of a national emergency, this farsighted program will pay good dividends from the standpoint of both the organized army or any type of home defense.

Rockdale Farm Pays Own Way With FSA Help

Stocktons Report Better Going Under Federal Program.

By DOYLE JONES JR.,
Farm Security Administration.
CONYERS, Ga., July 20.—The last glimmer of hope was about extinguished for Mr. and Mrs. V. W. Stockton in 1938. As sharecroppers on a small farm in Rockdale county, they had waged a valiant but losing fight to attain some degree of economic security. They were through and they knew it. To go on alone was folly.

In the fall of 1938 the Stocktons and their eight children turned to the Farm Security Administration for the assistance they could find no other place.

Work Wasn't Enough.
Married 26 years and living on a farm the greater portion of the time, they were intimately acquainted with hard work, but paradoxically that wasn't enough. Back-breaking labor availed them nothing. Every year it took their part of the crop to keep out of debt and buy a few clothes, "not near enough to keep us warm," as they had nothing to save on until Mrs. Stockton said, "then they started another crop. Faced with no alternative they would have to sell their corn and chickens and anything else of value to secure provisions for the family. Spring found them stripped with only the waning hope that the coming year would be better than the past to sustain them to continue farming.

The first year on the program, 1939, the Stocktons made a good crop of cotton, potatoes, peas, peanuts and forage for their livestock. They met their FSA payments and "for the first time had money in the bank."

Progress Under Program.
If this isn't progress then Mrs. Stockton must have been dreaming when she said, "We also bought a pressure cooker through the FSA and last year I canned about 300 jars of fruits and vegetables. Since I can remember this is the first time we have not had to buy everything as we formerly did. Also, we have meat in the smokehouse, a crib of corn, plenty of potatoes until time for them again, and a yard of chickens which we won't have to sell off to provide the necessities of life. We have done all this the first year and with the help of God hope to do still more this year.

"Our ambition is to own a little place and build a good warm house so we can be comfortable during the winter for before we have had to live in houses that were not sealed with cracks in the floor and holes in the roof which made it hard to stay dry and warm."

The 1940 objectives of the Stocktons are to can 500 quarts of fruit and vegetables, raising of young heifers for milk cows, a hundred hens and enough food and feed for both livestock and home needs.

4 Negroes Found Beaten to Death

VIDALIA, Ga., July 21.—(P)

The bodies of four members of a Negro family, beaten to death, were found in their cabin on Epstein street here about noon today, Sheriff Bob Gray said.

Indications were that the group had been murdered, assaulted with a blunt instrument, the sheriff said.

They were listed as Fannie White, 60; her daughter, Lillie Belle Sharpe, and two grandchildren, Annie May, 12, and Otto, 3.

The Sharpes were residents of Jacksonville and were here to nurse the older woman, who was afflicted.

State patrolmen are aiding Sheriff Gray in the investigation.

Suspects Seized; Police Leave Loot

The police report read "Property still at location, and nobody asked why the officers didn't bring it to headquarters. The property was a number of railroad brake shoes." Each weighs 1,000 pounds and each is valued at $300.

The Southern railroad reported they missing from their shops yesterday morning, and they were later recovered by Patrolmen C. C. Carroll and R. E. Whitley at a Windsor street address, the officers reported.

Jim Martin, negro, 33, of Windsor street, and John Starkes, 54, of a Garibaldi street address, were arrested by the officers in connection with the case.

ONE-DAY VACATION—Work was forgotten, but farm talk went on Friday when Putnam, Jones, Jasper and Baldwin county agricultural leaders met for a day of conference and recreation at Rock Eagle park, near Eatonton. Here talking while they eat barbecue, are (left to right) B. G. Thompson, Putnam county agent; C. B. Williamson, Jones county agent; Mrs. Russell Spivey, wife of a Putnam county farm board member, and George Cook, member of the Baldwin County Farm Club.

Farmers Play, Discuss 'Shop' At Rock Eagle

Leaders of Four Counties Hold Outing and Conference.

Special to THE CONSTITUTION.

EATONTON, Ga., July 20.—Members of four co-operative farm organizations have returned to their homes today, enriched by a program of shop talk and refreshed by a day of recreation at Rock Eagle Park, near here.

The Putnam county farm board was host yesterday to the farm boards of Jones and Jasper counties, and to the Baldwin County Farm Club. Farm problems were discussed during the morning, a barbecue was served at midday, and the afternoon was devoted to swimming, boating and fishing in the new 110-acre Rock Eagle lake.

Besides members of the four farm boards, leading agriculturists from all parts of the state were present.

With middle Georgia rapidly transforming itself into a dairy and cattle-growing section, the major part of the program was confined to dairy problems.

Dr. Dawson Allen, prominent Milledgeville Jersey breeder, told the group the state must pay more attention to cattle breeding if it expects to maintain a lead in milk production. In the past eight years, Dr. Allen has won the state's Jersey production six times.

B. G. Thompson, Putnam county agent, reviewed the history of the putnam county farm board, after which several other boards in the state have been patterned.

Others appearing on the program, of which President George M. Scheer was master of ceremonies, were Colonel Erwin Sibbey, Milledgeville; C. B. Williamson, Gray; County Agent Thomas, Monticello; W. F. Leverette, Eatonton; and Talmadge George and Richard Hull, Atlanta.

Camp To Publish Volume of Poetry

MONROE, Ga., July 20.—Ernest

Camp, editor of the Walton Tribune, past president of the Georgia Press Association and poet laureate of that group, today announced he has in preparation a new volume of poems, which will be published later in the year.

Editor Camp has achieved wide distinction for his verse, and a number of his poems have appeared in leading anthologies in recent years. In 1923 he issued a booklet of selected poems entitled "Autumn Odes," and in 1938 a more pretentious volume which bore the title of "Autumn Odes."

The coming book, the most ambitious the editor-poet has ever attempted, will be made up of poems on various subjects, and none of the collection, with one or two exceptions, has ever appeared in print.

Only one more week of summer school remains, Thomas W. Clift, business manager of the Atlanta school system, said yesterday. Several hundred students are attending the vacation classes.

Dr. James F. Hackney, assistant city health officer, yesterday was examining a group of boys who are to leave this week for the Bert Adams Boy Scout camp. The office rang with happy cries in anticipation of rugged outdoors life.

Councilman C. M. (Mac) Bolen, of the fourth ward, yesterday was ill with a cold and throat infection. He was reported only slightly indisposed.

Robert Speer, chief chemist of the city health department, who was rained out of several fishing trips recently, yesterday said he planned to try again during the weekend.

A political rally in behalf of Roy LeCraw, candidate for mayor, will be held at 8 o'clock tomorrow night at the Jerome Jones school, it was announced yesterday. An entertainment program has been arranged.

NAMED LIEUTENANT.
SMYRNA, Ga., July 20.—John Dan Anderson, son of Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Anderson, of near here, was among six Citadel College graduates enrolled today as second lieutenants in the regular army.

Young Anderson will be attached to the 29th Infantry at Fort Benning, Ga. He recently completed a six-week training period at Fort McClellan, Ala.

Young Harris Alumni Will Convene August 1

Special to THE CONSTITUTION.

YOUNG HARRIS, Ga., July 20.—The annual homecoming of the Young Harris College Alumni Association will be held on the campus here Thursday, August 1, with the Rev. H. T. Freeman, superintendent of the Valdosta district, South Georgia Methodist Conference, as the alumni speaker.

S. E. Hamrick, of Cartersville, president of the association, will open the meeting at 11 o'clock (E. S. T.) in Susan B. Harris chapel.

Immediately after adjournment of the chapel meeting a barbecue will be served on the campus for all visitors and friends in the town and community.

WASHINGTON, July 20.—(P)

Some new rules for campaigning in this year's and subsequent federal elections became effective today when President Roosevelt signed the Hatch clean politics bill. The measure, sponsored by Senator Hatch and Representative Dempsey, both New Mexican Democrats, restricts political activity by state and local government workers paid in whole or part from federal funds. It affects about 300,000.

The new legislation also places a limit of $3,000,000 a year on expenditures by the national committees of political parties and limits to $5,000 the contribution of any individual or organization to a party committee.

"This should stop these tremendous campaign contributions," Dempsey said. "When someone gives half a million dollars to a political campaign chest, everybody knows something is expected in return."

The limit on campaign expenditures compares with $8,000,000 spent by the Republican national committee and $5,000,000 spent by the Democratic national committee in 1936.

Violations of the Hatch act by state employees could result in their dismissal, or, if the state agency failed to dismiss them, loss of twice the annual salaries of the employee from federal grants.

Attempts to use federal funds or influence to coerce or intimidate voters could be punished by fine up to $10,000 and imprisonment of up to a year.

Early House Vote Seen on TVA Bill

WASHINGTON, July 20.—(P)

House action will be sought Wednesday on a $25,000,000 appropriation for TVA's proposed dam project on the Holston river in Tennessee.

Representative Sparkman, Democrat, Alabama, said sponsors of the bill would ask the house rules committee Tuesday for a rule under which it might be brought up on the floor the following day.

In addition to the money for the dam, the measure would appropriate $10,500,000 for a steam plant to be erected at a site to be selected.

The appropriation would start a $65,800,000 three-year program designed to produce additional power, part of which would be used by the Aluminum Company of America at its Tennessee plant. It was recommended, Sparkman said, by the National Defense Advisory Commission and the President.

Story of Indian Springs Camp To Be Retold at Jubilee Meeting

Holiness Series To Be Held August 8-18 on Site Chosen by Prayer in 1889 After Long Search Through Georgia Forest.

INDIAN SPRINGS, Ga., July 24.—(P)—One chilly December day in 1889 four men tramped through the forests here, often pausing to kneel and bow their heads.

They gazed at grounds the Creek Indians, who discovered the now-famous springs here, had long before turned over to white men.

As they bowed their heads they prayed. The four were seeking a location for a camp ground where Methodist followers and others could gather the following summer and summers to come for religious meetings.

Finally they found their spot. It was used for the next summer's meeting. Camp meeting after camp meeting has followed on that spot and many have been the conversions to Christian faith there.

Golden Jubilee.
Next month hundreds will celebrate the golden jubilee of the Indian Springs Holiness Camp Ground and the evangelistic services held there 50 years ago.

By train, motor car, horseback and afoot they will gather from the southeast for 11 days (August 8-18) of preaching, praying and fellowship.

The Rev. Leonard H. Cochran, of Savannah, vice president of the camp ground group, said he believes attendance will break all records for the 50 years of meetings.

Although the camp was founded by the Methodist church, it has always been interdenominational, Mr. Cochran asserted.

The campers will live in a hotel on the camp grounds, boarding houses and cabins. They will hear sermons by Bishop Arthur J. Moore, presiding bishop of the Georgia and Florida conferences of the Methodist church; by Dr. H. C. Morrison, of Louisville, Ky., and by Dr. J. M. Glenn, of Atlanta, camp ground president.

They may hear again the story of how the camp location was selected by the Rev. G. W. Matthews, W. A. Dodge, H. A. Hodges and J. H. Curry, who, says Mr. Matthews, "walked that memorable day over much of the ground from Flovilla to Indian Springs."

"More than once during the day the quartet knelt and sought direction as to the best place, and when it was thought that the proper site had been found, we prayed again that God would overrule and change the choice if He saw best. This He did in the prayer, and the present location proved manifestly better in every way, and was finally chosen."

Strawbridge, who formerly led a ballet of 60 dancers with the Philadelphia Symphony orchestra, is conducting his second summer theater season on the rustic Patch Work Barn at the Hettie Jane Dunaway Gardens. The project is believed to be the first in America devoted exclusively to dance repertoire.

Five-Year Plan.
Strawbridge's project has been started on a five-year basis. The progress that has been made in less than two seasons, he reports, prompts him to predict that this section of Georgia, by 1944, will be one of the most talked-of summer theaters and dance art centers in the nation.

Performances in the Patch Work Barn theater this year have been given each Friday night since July 5 and will continue weekly through August 2. The season will be climaxed August 1-3 with a Georgia Dance Festival, at which Strawbridge plans to have a gathering of many outstanding groups from throughout the south to show their own dances and to discuss their problems in a series of open forums.

The season's programs, each originated by Strawbridge, include ballets of an intimate type and diversifications. From the 33 dancers who have come to the gardens from all parts of the United States for the season, a company of 14 was chosen to participate in performances. Next year, it is Strawbridge's hope to invite leading dramatic stars to come to Georgia as guest performers in much the same way that leading actors appear in summer dramatic theaters in the east.

To Return to Tour.
Shortly after he concludes his season in the Dunaway Gardens, Strawbridge will begin his annual winter concert tour. He returned to Georgia this summer direct from the Metropolitan Opera House in New York.

Sharing a leading role in Strawbridge's Georgia venture is his dancing partner, Virginia Miller, who formerly danced with Ruth St. Denis. For the past two years she has been touring America as the prima ballerina of Strawbridge's company.

"Coppelia," famous ballet, will be given in the Patch Work Barn next Friday, with music by Debussy. Featured also on the program will be two Indian dancers, Grey Wolf and Morning Star, who will present authentic Indian dances.

In the last program of the season, August 2, Grey Wolf will stage an Indian pageant in the amphitheater of the gardens.

Baby health centers this week will be conducted by Dr. J. P. Kennedy, city health officer, at 1:30 o'clock in the afternoon at F. L. Stanton school, Monday; Whiteford school, Tuesday; Stanton school, Wednesday; and Jerome Jones school, Thursday.

Reunion of the Thompson family will be held at Adams Park next Sunday. Basket lunches will be served.

Dr. Willis A. Sutton, superintendent of Atlanta schools, will address the luncheon membership meeting of the Atlanta Convention and Visitors' Bureau at 12:30 o'clock Thursday at the Wincoff hotel.

Atlanta Rotary Club will hold its meeting at 12:30 o'clock Monday at the Ansley hotel. C. H. Carroll, general manager, southern division of the Western Union Telegraph Company, will speak on "What's New in Communications."

Assistant State Forester R. D. Franklin reported yesterday that no fires were reported in Georgia's 5,000,000 acres of forest land for the week ending July 18—the first time Forestry Department records of July 12-18 week passed without some damage from fires.

Third Ward Improvement Club will meet at 8 o'clock Tuesday night at the Lula L. Kingsbury School. Federal housing projects and the Federal Farmer's Market Exchange will be the subjects of discussion.

Tests in Grass Breeding To Be Shown at Tifton

Special to THE CONSTITUTION.

TIFTON, Ga., July 20.—Farmers and agricultural workers who attend the Southeastern Grassland Conference at the Georgia Coastal Plain Experiment Station, to be held on July 25 and 26, will see some of the work that is being done on grass breeding in Georgia.

The conference will be preceded by a two-day session, at which time technical workers of experiment stations, extension services and other agencies will confer on the problems, objectives and methods of procedure in the field of grass research. Farmers have been especially invited to attend the session July 26, accompanied by their county agents.

Camp Arrangements.
The campers will live in a hotel on the camp grounds, boarding houses and cabins. They will hear sermons by Bishop Arthur J. Moore, presiding bishop of the Georgia and Florida conferences of the Methodist church; by Dr. H. C. Morrison, of Louisville, Ky., and by Dr. J. M. Glenn, of Atlanta, camp ground president.

They may hear again the story of how the camp location was selected by the Rev. G. W. Matthews, W. A. Dodge, H. A. Hodges and J. H. Curry, who, says Mr. Matthews, "walked that memorable day over much of the ground from Flovilla to Indian Springs."

"More than once during the day the quartet knelt and sought direction as to the best place, and when it was thought that the proper site had been found, we prayed again that God would overrule and change the choice if He saw best. This He did in the prayer, and the present location proved manifestly better in every way, and was finally chosen."

Edwin Strawbridge Envisages Success for Theater Plan.

(Pictures in Rotogravure Section.)

Special to THE CONSTITUTION.

NEWNAN, Ga., July 20.—Establishment of a permanent summer theater and development of a major dance art center that would mark Georgia as a pioneer in the field of cultural activity in this south has been undertaken near here by Edwin Strawbridge, the internationally known ballet dancer.

Strawbridge, who formerly led a ballet of 60 dancers with the Philadelphia Symphony orchestra, is conducting his second summer theater season on the rustic Patch Work Barn at the Hettie Jane Dunaway Gardens. The project is believed to be the first in America devoted exclusively to dance repertoire.

Five-Year Plan.
Strawbridge's project has been started on a five-year basis. The progress that has been made in less than two seasons, he reports, prompts him to predict that this section of Georgia, by 1944, will be one of the most talked-of summer theaters and dance art centers in the nation.

Performances in the Patch Work Barn theater this year have been given each Friday night since July 5 and will continue weekly through August 2. The season will be climaxed August 1-3 with a Georgia Dance Festival, at which Strawbridge plans to have a gathering of many outstanding groups from throughout the south to show their own dances and to discuss their problems in a series of open forums.

The season's programs, each originated by Strawbridge, include ballets of an intimate type and diversifications. From the 33 dancers who have come to the gardens from all parts of the United States for the season, a company of 14 was chosen to participate in performances. Next year, it is Strawbridge's hope to invite leading dramatic stars to come to Georgia as guest performers in much the same way that leading actors appear in summer dramatic theaters in the east.

To Return to Tour.
Shortly after he concludes his season in the Dunaway Gardens, Strawbridge will begin his annual winter concert tour. He returned to Georgia this summer direct from the Metropolitan Opera House in New York.

Patrol Tricks Armed Veteran Into Surrender

Farmer Stands Off Officers for Hours With Gun.

Branchville, Ga., July 20.—(P)

Fast talk mastered fast shooting today, ended a war veteran's bullet-backed defiance, and brought a bloodless arrest on a farm near this southwest Georgia village.

Horace Whitcomb, 40-year-old farmer, submitted quietly to arrest on a lunacy warrant shortly before noon after listening to the persuasion of State Patrol Corporal Phil Adams and Trooper Tom Howard.

Shortly before dawn, however, he plunked five pistol bullets into the automobile of Troopers T. E. McClung and R. E. Murray when they tossed tear gas bombs into his four-room frame house, and he continued to defy a dozen officers for several hours.

Lunacy Warrant.
Deputy Sheriff James Jones said Whitcomb previously had been under treatment in a government hospital and when his mental condition again became bad, brother, Guy Whitcomb, obtained a lunacy warrant.

When the deputy and brother tried to persuade Whitcomb to accept service of the warrant yesterday, he drove them away, Jones said.

A request for help was sent to the Thomasville headquarters of the state patrol early today and, after McClung and Murray were repulsed, a hurry call was sent to state patrol headquarters in Atlanta for fresh tear gas and a machinegun.

Safety Commissioner Lon Sullivan ordered his men to make no attacks on the besieged farmer pending arrival of the gas and gun, so Adams and Howard tried diplomacy in the face of Whitcomb's ready pistol and his shot-gun.

No Resistance.
They managed to get him out on the porch and engaged him in intensive conversation—details of which they did not disclose—while they worked slowly closer to him with the idea of overpowering him if necessary. However, he offered no resistance as they closed in and submitted to arrest and disarming without violence.

Whitcomb was lodged in the Mitchell county jail at Camilla pending removal to a hospital. Deputy Jones said Whitcomb formerly lived in Macon, having returned to his farm home on the Bainbridge road 15 miles southwest of Camilla about two years ago. He lived alone, his wife having died recently.

The attorney general said the Georgia law provides that apportionment of members in the house of representatives among the various counties "shall be changed by the general assembly at its first session after each census taken by the United States government," and that, therefore, there could be no change in the number of county representatives to be elected at the approaching September primary.

Arnall said he received a letter from Attorney James R. Davis Jr. of Thomaston, explaining that Upon county was expected to run over 25,000 in population for 1940 and thereby get an additional representative.

And the Shouting Dies

The clamor of the Democratic-national convention is over. Quiet reigns again in the great Chicago hall and weary delegates are home-bound.

It was good for the nation that the nomination of Henry A. Wallace for the vice presidency was not achieved too easily. The revolt which made it a real race demonstrated, at a time when such demonstration was needed, that this country still conducts its affairs in the democratic way. A great party had found it desirable, in the exigencies of the times, to scrap an American tradition of a century and a half. A president had been nominated for a third term. The delegates are decided, overwhelmingly, that the theoretical dangers of the third term, for such a man as President Roosevelt, faded into insignificance when compared to the urgency of keeping his cool head and practiced hand at the helm of the ship of state in a world beset with revolution, with boiling passions of a desperate, driven mankind.

But, having renominated Roosevelt for the second time, having silenced their own fears about "third term" danger, many of the delegates refused to permit Roosevelt to nominate his running mate for the race just ahead. That smacked too much of dictatorship at home. The nation needs Roosevelt as president, they said, but it is still the prerogative of this convention to choose its nominees, uninfluenced by any outside source, no matter how beloved that source and how logical its desire to select a fellow standard-bearer.

So the delegates revolted. For a time it looked as though the revolt might succeed. Wallace won on the first ballot, true, but his backers knew they had been through a fight.

The Democratic ticket is, unmistakably, 100 per cent New Deal. The coming campaign will be, in so far as domestic issues are involved, a straight fight between the liberalism of the New Dealers and the conservatism of the Republican opposition.

This, of course, will make for an interesting campaign. It is an issue which, at other times, would be vitally important. Today, however, it is overshadowed by the far greater issues of the war in Europe, and its effect upon America, and that of providing proper defense for this nation and this hemisphere.

On these two issues of paramount concern, Democratic and Republican platform planks are strangely similar. The Democrats are a little more direct, speak a little more plainly, avoid the extreme ambiguity found in the Republican plank. That is all.

Thus the coming race, in so far as the two truly important issues are concerned, resolves itself into a choice between candidates. The voters of the nation will say, in November, whether they prefer a man new to high political office, a man untried in the difficult task of international relations and diplomacy, or a man who has led this nation through the shoal waters and the churning rapids of a world that, of recent years, has seemed to be racing madly toward a precipice of self-destruction.

Henry Wallace, the candidate for vice president, has handled a most difficult task for the past seven years. It was the unavoidable factors of his job, rather than the man himself, which aroused resentment in some sections. As a man, he is undoubtedly of highest caliber and timber fully capable of shaping into a fit pillar of the highest temples of government in this nation.

The totalitarian philosophy is really quite simple: If the 10-ton truck is going north in the southbound one-way street, it is right.

A Gertrude Stein manuscript, just arrived from Paris, had not been opened by French censors. It was enough to be defeated by Germany.

"Burglar alarms, elaborate locks, an air squadron and a troop of mechanized cavalry protect the nation's gold at Fort Knox." What—no moth balls?

An opinion poll shows that party platforms are not among the reading public's favorite literature. One laid down, in fact, they can hardly be picked up.

The First Open Shot

The first open shot in the Fascist war against the Americas was fired Tuesday when Spain severed diplomatic relations with Chile.

Chile is one of the few nations in South America that actually is a democratic entity. It is a country that has broken the power of large landowners. It is a country that has been struggling valiantly to preserve the democratic forms and to end peonage forever despite a terrific economic battering. That in itself is a real accomplishment, for the end of the World War found Chile's chief export product practically eliminated from world markets by the development of synthetic substitutes for nitrate. Somehow or other, the people of Chile have managed to avoid the concomitant of economic distress in a South American land—dictatorship.

The quarrel of Chile with Franco furnished the vehicle for the Fascist action. It must be emphasized it is merely the excuse. At the termination of the Spanish civil war, in which Fascism crushed a liberal people, the Chilean embassy in Madrid gave asylum to 17 Loyalists. The sympathies of the Chilean people had been with the Loyalists, and it was only natural that have should be given those who otherwise would have been doomed to death at the hands of Franco's Gestapo, which was only too efficient.

Of more immediate consequence to this country and to all of South America is the charge that the Chilean government now tolerates an anti-nationalist campaign which has "reached intolerable limits." The quotes are those of the Spanish foreign ministry. What happened in Chile was that the Chilean government moved to save itself and the people of Chile, by raids upon Nationalist headquarters, in which documents proved plotting of "activities against the public order." What a crime! Break up the plotting ordered from Berlin, Rome and Madrid, and thereby get on the Nazi blacklist. That is what we in the Americas now face. That is the threat hurled at South America. At the United States.

It must be emphasized this action is taken against the country that is more like the United States than any other South American nation, with the sole exception of Colombia.

It demonstrates the great and grave need for the necessity of swift, determined and bold action by this country to preserve the rights of all countries in the western hemisphere. It illustrates the reasons why the people of the United States must, in this emergency, re-arm with the greatest possible speed, and why it is imperative that an army and a navy be prepared for action anywhere on this hemisphere at any time. Not next year, not next month, but immediately. That is why conscription must be ordered. That is why the national guard should be called for intensive training. Tomorrow may be too late, for the first shot has been fired.

Chile, struggling to save itself, has been made the target. The ferment of Nazi revolution is at work in that country and a shattered economy is the field in which the bacteria works. The bitter realization of the task we face in the next months and years is driven home.

Hitler's mistakes will come in due course and a revolution will undo him, says Emil Ludwig, an old Napoleon biographer himself.

Good Reporting

Britain has created a mighty army of defense, to meet any blitzkrieg or invasion attempt Hitler may launch. And hundreds of thousands of people in this country, familiar with the quiet beauty of peacetime England, have wondered what the scene must be like, in that land, today. Imagination has failed to picture the changes that must have taken place.

Drew Middleton, on the Associated Press staff in London, has recently made a two-day tour, covering some 500 miles of the armed fortress that England has become, and he writes of what he saw in a story that appeared in The Constitution on Friday last. It is an example of a first-rate job of reporting.

The story isn't long—half a column at most. Yet in it Middleton draws, with vivid stroke, a picture of England today, awaiting confidently anything the enemy can do, that tells more than all the statements by important leaders, that is more real than anything imagination could depict.

"Earthworks crown hills. Concrete pillboxes and gun positions, masked by paint and foliage, command vital roads and vital landing points for air or seaborne invasion. Thousands of troops tramp the country lanes and patrol the areas where the first German blow may fall. . . ."

If you know and love the England of peace, look up and read—if you missed it—that story by Drew Middleton, in Friday's Constitution. It tells a lot, in a few words.

A slight cooling is noted in Washington's martial ardor. Only a few of the elder fire-eaters still give the illusion of smoking their cigars backward.

Telling her she looks like a million dollars isn't so much. Saying she's worth her weight in gold is consigning her to an early Kentucky grave.

POST-CONVENTION NOTES

Jim Farley will become president of the New York Yankees as soon as certain details are worked out. The Yankees are being purchased by a syndicate which contains two well-known south-easterners.

Farley will not, as has been reported, give all his time to the Yankees. He will be the front man, making personal appearances and lending his name and popularity to the team. As such he will give it a color and personality it has lacked since Babe Ruth and Colonel Jake Ruppert have passed on, one out of baseball and the other out of this life. Yankee publicity will triple. Farley will make it news.

Jim Farley's real job will be with another company, soon to be announced. It, too, is being financed by a syndicate of businessmen. Farley's salary with this company will be about $60,000, approximately that of the presidency which he wanted and did not get.

Farley retained the chairmanship of the New York state Democratic executive committee. As such he will be a potent factor in state politics. Farley is at odds with the Roosevelt administration but will vote for it. That is not as important as the question of whether he will work for it in the state. Or whether he will by silence give consent to any revolt group in the state.

The odds are he will assist in giving New York to the Democratic ticket. Farley is a party man. His anger hardly will destroy his sense of the practical. There can be no benefit to Democrats in a Republican victory. Farley is a grand person and too big, his friends believe, for his present bitterness to make him a party to any plan to scuttle the party ship in New York.

M'NUTT DEMONSTRATION Paul McNutt's demonstration at the national convention, carefully was planned, not so much for the 1940 convention as for the 1944 convention.

I was on the floor that night and heard, as did other newspapermen present, the distribution of the McNutt workers.

"You go to the Virgin Islands delegation. You go to the Arkansas delegation." And so on. In the gallery were hundreds of McNutt rooters, spotted in different sections.

They led the verbal revolt, cheering McNutt, booing Wallace.

McNutt stood up there asking them to be quiet and his own men kept it going, leading those who shouted him down. They were aided by the fact Wallace is not too popular and by the fact, too, that some resented the fact the President had demoted him. It is customary, of course, for the presidential nominees to suggest a choice. The President was not out of line in so doing, but he angered some by being insistent.

McNutt refused, as he planned to do. One cannot blame him for putting on his show. He had spent considerable money in his campaign and the President should, of course, have informed him in advance that he wanted Wallace. So, McNutt properly and practically, put on his show.

The nation heard thousands shouting and cheering for McNutt. It was valuable publicity. It was McNutt's announcement of his candidacy in 1944.

THE DEMONSTRATIONS Attending a national political convention is something like visiting a movie studio. It destroys some illusions.

Demonstrations are planned. Spontaneous demonstrations occur but they would not, of course, last for 30 and 40 minutes except for some planning.

This is done in all Republican and Democratic conventions. They are assisted by certain delegates who honestly like to parade and shout and fight their way through crowds. They give it some reality. There always are enough of them to give any demonstration some real validity no matter what its length. They just like to carry banners, shout and parade.

The parades are exciting to watch. A convention without them would be more businesslike, but the galleries would not care for a demonstrationless convention.

Floor leaders of delegations, eager to make a showing, also assist on putting on shows. Chicago's Mayor, Ed Kelly, who wishes to see the New Deal returned to power, helped out the demonstrations with many of his own ward workers who carried signs and did considerable shouting.

This convention was decidedly unconventional in that it saw the dying fight of those dubbed reactionaries by the New Deal leaders. Their last convention effort was the revolt against Wallace.

It is well to remember, in saying this convention was "bossed", that the "bossing" was done in the state conventions which, months ago, one after another, instructed and pledged to Roosevelt. There was little need of bossing at Chicago.

SILHOUETTES

By RALPH T. JONES.

Perturbed Mother.

Now, I don't want to start unending and profitless controversies with this column today. And I make no pretense to formulating either peace or war policies for the United States. But I do want to talk about a telephone conversation and cannot do so without expressing some views. So, stand or fall, here goes it.

She called at a time when the old typewriter was in an unusual rush. Composing room had called for a couple of items overlooked earlier in the day and it was drawing close to deadline time. Yet couldn't refrain from holding the conversation with the lady, for a few minutes at least.

She was, by the sound of her voice, elderly. Too, she said she had two grandsons whose age would make them subject to draft if compulsory military training bill became law.

What she wanted to know was the meaning of that statement in the Democratic party platform, to the effect that this nation should not send its army, navy or air force abroad to fight, except if attacked. She couldn't understand that phrase, "if attacked." Wanted to know how we could be attacked, abroad, if we weren't there.

Of course, I couldn't explain. For it all depends upon the interpretation you put upon that qualifying word "attack." An incident you might consider an "attack" I might not. And vice versa.

For instance, some of the threats and protests delivered to one or two Latin American countries by various European dictators look to me dangerously like precursors to attack. Maybe you don't agree. Let it go.

So all I could tell the dear soul on the telephone was that the word "attack" would probably be defined according to public opinion, when and if occasion for definition ever arose.

Against Training.

Then she told me how strongly opposed she was to compulsory military training, because of those two grandsons, gathered. And I tried to tell her how wrong she was, but she was one of those women not open to conviction. She'd made up her mind and she was against military training for anyone and that was all there was to it.

And there is where we disagreed. Of course, the conversation over the phone was pleasant and courteous and all that, but we just couldn't agree at all, at all. In the first place it isn't this country, or anyone in it, who is going to decide whether we go to war or not. It is a gentleman of the name of Hitler, in Europe, or someone like him. We are not a nation that goes to war, that glories in war. In fact, we hate war.

Yes, madam, I'd sooner see my son march away, strong and capable and trained, than to see him slain, helpless to defend himself, like a fly under the heel of a mechanized military monster.

Twenty-Five Years Ago Today.

From the news columns of Wednesday, July 21, 1915:

"London, July 20.—The Austro-Germans continue pounding the Russian front, and military critics say nothing but a miracle can save Warsaw, the Polish capital."

And Fifty Years Ago.

From the news columns of Monday, July 21, 1890:

"Editor Underwood, of the Camilla Clarion, is the father of thirty-seven children. At the recent press banquet at Fort Valley it required a hotel and seven small cottages to accommodate them."

Text and Pretext

By M. ASHBY JONES.

"HEAVIEST ARTILLERY." Napoleon is reported to have said: "God is on the side of the heaviest artillery." This seemingly cynical statement has shocked many devout people, and perhaps is responsible for the popular impression that the great French general was an atheist. Never theless, his statement has been proven to be tragically true before our very eyes, from Finland to France. Nor is it an expression of atheism. It is rather a divine truth, which we must understand if we would save what is left of freedom and decency in the world, that when men submit their causes to the arbitrament of force, they must proceed by the laws of physical force.

Let us not forget that physical laws are divine laws. A mechanized army is a group of men scientifically equipped with machines of destruction, and every man trained to act with mechanical accuracy in co-ordination with every other man. If such an army meets another army of inferior equipment and training in a physical conflict, God's laws are on the side of the mechanized force, so far as the physical conflict is concerned. There is a human element which may add force and effectiveness to the mechanical weapons. This we call the courage or morale of an army. It comes largely from faith in the cause for which they are fighting. But we must recognize the truth that the German youth permeated by Hitler's standards of national morality, go into battle with a fanatical faith in the righteousness of their cause.

The fact that we here in America believe that they are terribly wrong, will not detract in the least from the effectiveness of their morale.

The Moral Element.

What we are saying here is, that in a military contest on the battlefield, God's physical laws are on the side of the army best equipped, physically and most scientifically directed. In this strictly physical contest no moral element is involved, nor will God modify or change His laws for the benefit of either contestant. If it were not for the benevolent provision that His physical laws are immutable, there could be no dependence in scientific search for truth, and no orderly procedure in our daily life.

But this is very far from saying that there is no moral difference in contestants in a military war. While guns are neither right nor wrong, gunners, according to the purposes and motives with which they shoot, are right or wrong. While a military victory can never prove the righteousness of the cause of the victor, it does often enable the victor to make his cause dominant in the world, by leaving him free from opposition. The victories thus far won by Hitler are very far from proving the totalitarianism, right and democracy wrong, but they have for the time being destroyed the liberties of the Scandinavian, Dutch, Belgian, and French peoples, and left Britain alone to defend those rights in Europe. Had these smaller countries united and presented a stronger force against the brutal Hitler force, it would not have proven democracy to be right, but it would have left these peoples free to pursue the democratic way of life.

Let us learn the hard lesson that while physical force cannot destroy the spiritual values—beauty, truth and goodness—it can destroy the institutions through which these values are preserved and function in the life of nations. Artillery can destroy art galleries and libraries, governments and cathedrals, in which men learn, and live and worship. On the other hand, while physical force cannot build a civilization alone, so long as there are uncivilized powers in the world which would destroy it, there must be a water-tight physical force employed to defend it. For we must not allow the children of unrighteousness to "be wiser than the children of light."

Function of Force.

I began with the thesis, that when men submit their causes to the arbitrament of force, they must proceed by the laws of physical force, and abide by the judgment. But aren't we learning today as never before in the history of the world, how unutterably stupid and supremely criminal it is to continue to place in jeopardy the priceless values of civilization on the military battlefield? So long as victory on the battlefield is awarded to "the heaviest artillery," nations in order to exist must maintain crushing burdens of arms in time of peace, which robs them of much of their freedom to concentrate their resources upon the building of the better way of life. Have we not reached a dead-end, which must convince the nations that we can no longer live under the jurisdiction of Mars? Perhaps, this darkest hour may prophesy the dawn of a new day, when we shall appeal from the arbitrament of the sword to the court of reason.

Artillery can only settle one question—which side has the strongest physical force. In 1917-18 we actually threw the weight of our artillery on the side of the democracies in order to protect the world from the dominance of force. But we had proclaimed to the world through the voice of our President that we were fighting this war in order to establish a league of reason, where the conflicting interests of the nations should no more be settled by the weight of artillery. In the court of physical force our artillery was heard loud and triumphant, but when the court of reason assembled America was silent. We were victorious in the arena of physical force, but defeated in the realm of spiritual forces.

Once again it becomes necessary for us to mobilize our ar-

A Letter to Senator Pittman

By DOROTHY THOMPSON.

My dear Senator Pittman:

There are a hundred thousand children waiting on the besieged little island of Great Britain to be evacuated to the United States, here to stay for the duration of the war. There are many times the necessary number of homes ready to receive these children, here in America. But the moving of a hundred thousand children from a dangerous place to a safe place seems to be beyond the competency of the "world's greatest democracy." Is it, really?

The British say that they have ships to send them in but that they cannot afford convoys. They dare not send them without convoys because Great Britain's ships are likely to be sunk otherwise by enemy submarines. They cannot use the convoys because they are needed to protect other ships, ships carrying food for the 40-odd millions of people on the islands and carrying raw materials for their factories and munitions with which to defend themselves. It is reasonable that they cannot afford to convoy children. The convoys are needed to protect all the other inhabitants of the islands from starvation and defeat.

THEY COULD BE BROUGHT

But these children, Senator, could be brought here without any convoys at all, provided they were carried in our ships, which are neutral. They could be brought provided we would send ships for the ships which would carry no contraband cargoes and would simply transport the children from Great Britain to these shores.

Our ships, at present, are not allowed to go into the war zones. That provision is in the neutrality act. But this provision of the neutrality act was passed in order to prevent our ships from being sunk by German submarines, thus involving us in difficulties with the German government.

The transportation of a hundred thousand children would not involve us in difficulties with the German government. It would be a purely humanitarian gesture. If the United States made it perfectly clear to the German government that our ships were entering the war zones for this purpose and this purpose alone; if the ships carrying the children flew the Red Cross flag as well as our own; if the dates of their departure from each point were thoroughly publicized, it is unthinkable that the German government or any other government would attack those ships.

PEOPLE WOULD DO SOMETHING

Mr. Senator, the people of this country are anxious to do something, to do something fine, big and generous, that will register for ourselves and the world that the idea of respect for humanity, which seems almost dead on this earth, is still alive in America.

Respect for humanity is what this country is all about, Mr. Senator, as you very well know. If the time ever comes when we ourselves begin to doubt whether we really feel much respect for humanity, for the simple right of human beings to live, a worse disaster will have overcome us than any we can yet foresee. This desire to save at least a few of Europe's beleaguered children is very American. That is why the response to the suggestion has been so spontaneous, so enthusiastic. Among our people there are many reactions to this war, and varying policies regarding it, but this is one thing on which we can all unite: we do not want any children to perish that we can save.

SOLUTION SIMPLE

Mr. Senator, in a time when it is terribly difficult for any government, and terribly difficult for our government, to know exactly what is the right thing to do, this thing is here at hand, and its solution is not difficult; it is completely simple. There is no problem of feeding these children. The government will not have to do it; ordinary individuals will do it. Enough food is wasted in this country every day to feed all the children of Great Britain. Also our government is considering buying up the surpluses of South America. What are we going to do with them? Why not use them to feed children, and help them to live, to make, let us hope, a better world than your generation and mine have managed to achieve?

Mr. Senator, if people have resources and do not use them for mankind, sooner or later they will lose them. There is an immediate connection between the general interest of the world at large and the immediate interests of the specific nation; and that of the last individual living in it. People say, "Perhaps these children will never be able to return." Then, Senator, we shall have aided and encouraged the first national immigration policy that this country has had for years. We shall have brought to this land children, children who are young enough to go to our public schools and learn American principles, children who can be absorbed into the life in their own generation, and new citizens who will have been brought here out of the instincts of love.

WILL STAY EXTENDED

Mr. Senator, in caring for these children we may also learn something for the actual preservation of our democratic freedom against the most perfectly organized army of force the world has ever known. But let us clearly understand that if we shall win a victory by having the "heaviest artillery" our task for building a decent democratic world will only be begun. Unless we are willing to take the lead in mobilizing the spiritual forces of the world, we will only repeat the tragic failure of 1917-18.

thing about caring for the children of Americans who are already here. People act only when an emergency confronts them, and they act most quickly and naturally when it is an emergency for which they can see the solution. There is an emergency, and we can see a solution. This solution, however, will set organization and effort in motion which will hardly stop when this emergency is over. Homes and farms, schools and empty mansions will find that they can open or extend their walls a bit. Once extended, they will stay extended. You know that every generous impulse put into use becomes accustomed to being used.

In the little town of Middlebury, Vt., I overheard just a snatch of conversation the other day. A man was crossing a lawn, after a meeting in which we had talked about this problem. And I overheard him say, "I've always wanted to finish that attic room, and now with these refugee children—"

That's all I overheard, but if that small-town citizen is willing to finish up his attic room for a child, won't you, Senator, let him take that child? Won't you push for arrangements whereby we can send for that child? And won't you do it immediately?

Take care of the transportation, Mr. Senator, and we will take care of the rest. It's not so difficult. Our ships have carried the materials for munitions to Japan. Let them do something now that represents American good will.

The Candidates And the Counties

Editor, Constitution: I am sure you will agree with me that to those of us who sit on the sidelines and listen to the different candidates for governor preach economy while seeking votes for themselves all they say amounts to less than nothing so far as the interest of the people of this state is concerned. Everybody knows that the only way by which any economizing can be done is in reducing the cost of government. The cost of government cannot be reduced appreciably without eliminating unnecessary operating agencies or departments. Not one of these candidates cares sufficiently for the interests of the taxpayers of this state to advocate what would be the greatest of all savings, i. e., reduce the number of counties in the state by half. No one could come even close to guessing the staggering amount being paid to unnecessary officials in 70 or more counties in the state. Why, for instance, would it not be best to take a group of counties with Hall county as the center and make one county of Hall and all those that join it? Why would not it be feasible to carry out such an idea all over the state?

Why should you not, as a great paper interested in Georgia and its people, sponsor such a plan, endeavoring to get all candidates to endorse it so that no one candidate would have any advantage over another in appealing for the county officer votes and influence?

I. B. LONG.

Atlanta.

Parting

Let our farewell be like a sun-drenched morning
When skies are clear immensities of blue
And birds begin their songs with little warbling
Of joy and love, and shatters through One's heart—let our good-bye be merely this:
A season when full blossoming was deep
So short a time that we shall scarcely know
The wonder—oh, let us be too strong to weep!

But in the last bright moment when I turn
With eyes stretched homeward till I cannot see Your waving hand, and cannot quite discern
Your presence there, a spell will capture me:
And then shall I grow weak, and pine
For safe returning on another day.
—WALTER BLACKSTOCK JR.

Investment

In this old world with its bustle and strife
We welcome to all we can get out of life
We get out just what we put into it,
they say,
And certainly there couldn't be any fairness in this, let's start now to invest.
This being the case, let's start now to invest Life with the finest, the noblest, and the best Truly mankind—sincerity, kindness and good deeds,
Sympathy, understanding and unimpeachable creeds—
Courtesy, gentleness and complete loyalty.
This done, I expect, we'll begin to collect a royalty.
—VIRGINIA TAPP.

Old Negro Faces

My heart goes out to many a face
I see upon the street
Black faces, old and seamed like lace,
Bent over weary feet
That shuffle a long-drawn road
Till they and earth may meet.
My heart goes out to many a hand
That clutch, palm-upward, for a dime
And, clanking, cling like iron bands
Both to the coin and to the hand.
One said, "God bless you," and another
"My life is sweet." O man, thy brother Waves humbly down life's one-way street.
—MAUDE WADDELL.

Dreams and Dust

By HAROLD MARTIN.

We read in Dudley Glass' column the other day that he had never witnessed an execution or a hanging and he never wanted to.

Well, we never wanted to, either, but we had to, once, and we wish we hadn't. We sat in the little death chamber in the tall white tower of Tattall prison one bright morning and, one after the other, saw six men die.

Strangely, it was not as horrible as you might think.

Please don't misunderstand. We aren't trying to appear callous, or cynical, or hard-bitten. We went in to see it, white and shaking, and wishing with all the heart that was in us we didn't have to do it. And we still wish we hadn't been there.

And yet the thing itself was so unreal, so utterly remote from anything the human mind can grasp, so casual, so mechanical, the routine of reporting it so trivial—clocking the time the man came in, the length of time the current flowed through him, the time when death was pronounced, how he looked, what he said—there never came until later the full realization of what was happening, the feeling of horror and revulsion that we feared.

It seemed, instead, only like some silly children's game that grown men were playing in a white-faced solemn tenseness.

The only feelings we had, watching as we remembered, was that here we were witnessing an idiotic thing, a futile thing, the most utterly useless thing our eyes had ever looked upon.

It didn't make sense.

It was meant as punishment, for the crimes they had committed. And in that it failed. It was too swift, too easy, too businesslike. Its victims were too little fearful. Sustained and uplifted by religious fervor, they seemed to welcome the chair as a means of release, as a gateway through which they would pass to a better, brighter world.

Life at hard labor, we couldn't help feeling, would have been sterner punishment.

It was meant as a lesson to all others who might sometime kill—a warning that "Here you too may someday die." In that it also failed. For what did this thing that happened in that remote little room mean to the boy in the jook-joint down the road with a pint of corn in his pocket and a chip on his shoulder? What did it mean to the man a hundred miles away, waiting in the dark alley, gun in his hand, planning the hold-up of the grocer across the street?

Nothing. Nothing at all.

It might, perhaps, have had some force, if the law fell alike upon all who kill. But that is not the way of the law. One man kills and goes to prison until the memory of his crime is old and a lenient state sets him free. Another man kills and goes to the chair.

Seven men were to have died that sunny morning at Tattall, six of them for murders committed in the heat of drunken passion. The other was a father who had slain the baby his daughter had borne him. His crime might well be thought more hideous than theirs. Yet while they were dying in the room above him, he received a reprieve. Head already shaved, trouser-leg already slashed, he got the message that meant his life with death only minutes away.

They died. He lived. The lesson that their dying might have taught was destroyed by the leniency he received.

It all happened two years ago, yet the memory of it is as fresh as yesterday.

The first one came singing down the walk they call the last mile, the little windowed passageway between death-cell and death-house where condemned men get their last view of the sun and the trees and the earth.

He came in blindly, eyes shut, the big muscles of his heavy neck swelling with a song—

"With a staff in his hand,
"God is coming to this land,
"God is coming to this land, by and by."

He stood in front of the chair as he finished the song. Then he asked, "May I kneel?" The man who led him in nodded. He knelt before the chair and he placed his head in it. He prayed the Lord's Prayer. Then, as if he saw the Lord before him, to be spoken to face to face, he prayed for his own soul. He stood up, sat down and waited without a word.

The strange, quiet nightmare of action by which the state kills a man began. The executioner strapped under his arms, tight across his chest, a heavy strap. He tightened straps across the wrists that lay on the wide chair-arms. He strapped the legs at the ankles. He lifted from its bucket of brine the weird metal death cap that looks like the upper and lower shell of a turtle, like two twin soup plates hinged at one side. It is a ludicrous, innocent-looking contrivance with a little top-knot that is the electrode through which the current flows. The man to die, wearing it, looked like a picture of an old Japanese warrior, a Samurai in antique helmet.

He placed over the condemned man's face the gaudy death mask of orange-colored rubber, a strangely out-of-place splash of color in the drab, washed-out green of the room.

It added to the feeling that here was going on some absurd children's game, with this one in the chair dressed up to play the king.

The executioner stepped quickly to the triple levers at the panel behind the chair. He threw the center one with a clang. Two men beside him, convicts helping with the killing for a fee (both had begged reporters their names not be mentioned for fear of retribution), threw levers on each side.

There was a high, whining hum. The body of the man in the chair lunged against the binding straps and as the drone of the current died, fell slowly back. It was as if he had leaped forward to listen for a moment, and hearing, had relaxed.

From beneath the metal skull-piece a thin wisps of smoke drifted up.

A doctor bared the chest, placed against it a stethoscope and listened. He nodded. A second doctor listened, nodded. The man was dead.

He seemed to be only sleeping as they lifted him from the chair and the hooked fingers of one hand caught and clung to a chair-arm as if reluctant to leave it.

The next one came in, walking swiftly, a gaunt scare-crow in ragged clothes. "Goodbye, everybody," he said, as the orange mask went over his face.

The next one came in singing as the first had done. "Good luck," he said, and he was gone.

The next came in without a word, died without a word.

The next was humming as he came, and little moans and mutters came from beneath the orange mask in the swift-passing seconds before the current whined.

The last walked blindly as the first had done, his eyes upon a testament, his lips moving as he read.

We sat and waited for the seventh to come. The door from the last mile did not open. The phone rang. The warden answered. He spoke to the executioner. The job of putting the place in order began.

"The other fellow got a reprieve," the warden said.

First we felt a great relief that we wouldn't have to see another. Then realization struck us. What we had seen was not stern, fair justice, meting out its terrible but righteous sentence, but a legalized slaughter.

Six had died. But one, whose crime was too hideous to comprehend, had been spared. Mercy to him made their deaths seem like murder. All men, we realized, were not equal before the law. There are white men and black men. Friendless men, and men with friends.

We were supposed to write a piece about swift, relentless justice, dealing its terrible but fair sentence upon all alike. We couldn't do it. It wouldn't make sense.

For somewhere in it would have to be the paragraph that would destroy whatever effect it might have had, a paragraph which would read:

"While the six men died, a seventh, convicted of the murder of a baby, waiting his turn in his cell, received a last-minute reprieve."

In his pocket he heard the news was a full confession of guilt he planned to give to the warden as he sat down in the chair."

by Dudley Glass

Valourously I joined the army a day or so ago.

For an hour or two, including lunch—and a mighty good lunch, too.

I was a visitor to the citizens' military training camp, out at Fort McPherson. And enjoyed it hugely.

Principally because I watched several high-up executives in newspaper work digging and drilling and sweating.

The biggest journalistic shot was Adolph S. Ochs, of the noted newspaper family, now general manager of the Chattanooga Times.

I yearned to see a general manager suffer. But Trainee Ochs didn't. He is young and not overburdened with fatty tissue, probably plays golf and tennis and swims—so he didn't turn a hair.

Except that the army shoes were not quite as comfortable as his made-to-order brand.

The rains had ceased for the day and the atmosphere was distinctly humid. Or sticky. Even under a shady tree my shirt stuck to my ribs.

But it was fun to watch those patriots work and start blisters. There were several Atlanta acquaintances whose piteous plight pleased me greatly.

They are all civilians, from corporation presidents to lawyers—and one Atlanta interior decorator—sleeping in crude barracks on army cots, rising at 5:45 a. m., eating the hearty breakfast which traditionally is enjoyed by the condemned, and marching out to dig "fox holes" and learn to bury themselves therein. It is true, in the case of the heftier trainees, that though their heads were concealed like that of the ostrich in the sand, there were still portions of their anatomy visible to the naked eye.

I was told that one trainee who had dug a "fox hole" and was ordered to crawl into it, came out twice as rapidly as he'd gone in. A coped moccasin had moved in just before him.

But it was fun to watch them toil. I was all worn to a frazzle before lunch time. I'm too darn sympathetic.

Paying Their Way.

Trainees of the camp, I was told, are treated with more consideration than ordinary buck privates enlisted in the army. Naturally, they would be. They are volunteers and they paid for their own uniforms and their board. Uncle Sam providing the camp, the barracks and the requisite number of cooks from the regular forces. The camp commander is Lieutenant Colonel Clifford R. Jones, a regular from the fourth corps area headquarters in Atlanta, who has a staff of officers to assist him. They furnish the knowledge and the trainees provide the sweat.

Naturally, I gravitated to newspapermen. John Kilgore runs the daily at Tallahassee, Fla. He was in khaki and army shoes. I asked him what he thought of the inter-pretation situation.

"It's queer," he said. "But after the first few days we all quit bothering about that."

"Before I came to camp I read all the columns discussing Hitler and European affairs. I thought a lot about what may take place and brooded over it. When we got settled here we installed a radio so we could keep up with the war news."

"But most of us don't talk about it or think about it much more. Perhaps it is because we discovered a way to do something instead of talking. Besides, we get pretty tired."

The attitude of the trainees seemed to be that if this country is going in for preparedness, they'd like to be prepared and ready. They want to get in good physical shape, learn to handle a rifle, to dig a trench, to sight a machine-gun. They're doing all that."

Speed 'Em Up.

Marietta Judge, criticizing severely the thing of lovers on the new four-lane highway—or what there is of it—observes that county officers cannot overtake motorists driving a hundred miles an hour.

My own petting experience went out with the horse and buggy. But I should think a driver doing 100 m. p. h. would except for exceeding the speed limit—be forced to behave with the utmost decorum, no matter how fair the charmer beside him.

Maybe that's an answer to the petting problem which seems to vex so many motorists. Make the speed limit nothing less than 50 m. p. h.—the legal limit. Some folk may be able to feel romantic at that speed. I know I couldn't. I'm cheered of blowouts.

Green Lights.

Effort is being made to synchronize traffic lights on North avenue, so a motorist doing a reasonable 23 miles an hour will hit green lights all the way out. Fine! And it may work—on North avenue.

It might work on Spring street or any main thoroughfare if everything moved along as sweetly as a song at twilight or the inexorable movement of the celestial planets in their respective orbits. I wish it would.

But what about the driver in the right-hand lane who desires to make a left turn and is going to do it in spite of hives and high water? What about the decrepit truck, running in second with cut-out open which can barely make the grade? What about the middle-aged wife who stops in the middle of the block to let out her loving husband, kisses him thrice and suddenly remembers to tell him to bring home two pounds of cue steak and a loaf of rye-sliced bread because Aunt Molly is coming out for dinner? And—oh, yes—a nice fresh head of lettuce, and be sure to pick it out himself.

A steady 23 miles per hour. How I wish I could make it!

A Lurking Menace

By C. C. DENNIS, Clerk.

There has arisen, with increased popularity, during the last several years, an insidious force in our life which, unless it is checked, will prove more disastrous to us as a nation than any betrayal by members of a Fifth Column, an inadequate national defense, or a staggering national debt. This new danger should be known as the Filth Column because it is filth at its worst.

At newsstands, in public libraries, in private libraries, and in places of amusement are books, periodicals, and plays which have reached the depth of filthiness. Their lewd and sexy themes are of such a nature that they would have been taboo in all but the vilest dives of a few years back. Yet, these books and periodicals go into the homes of many of our citizens, to be read by young and old alike. To call such filth trashy is a misnomer. Trash is clean as compared to this crawling, slimy, and murky cesspool of sex, depravity and lewdness—it is the rankest of filth.

The Fifth Column can hurt us only materially, and our military forces can be improved sufficiently to meet any attack, and economy and taxes can take care of our national debt, but the Filth Column can do irreparable damage to us mentally, spiritually and morally. It undermines our morals, contaminates our minds, debases our souls, and cheapens those things that we should hold dear and regard as holy.

The great danger of the Filth Column is that it seems to be enjoyed by so many. Do we, as Americans, enjoy wallowing in this gutter-type of so-called entertainment?

The answer to this problem is not so much in passing laws to suppress such contamination as it is that we must develop character in the home that can withstand the temptation of partaking of such indulgence, for after all the development of character is possible not by avoiding coming into contact with transgression, but rather to overcome it by the knowledge that it isn't decent, and a determined desire to enjoy only the better things of life. Let us hope that we may be able to stamp out this serpent before we are overcome by its poison.

A New Deal Campaign

By MARK SULLIVAN.

WASHINGTON, July 20—There are two camps in the campaign for the New Deal.

One is the New Dealers. And there are two camps in the campaign for the New Dealers. That these two are quite different, everybody understands. In the Chicago convention, the New Dealers got everything.

To say the Democrats got nothing will be quite wrong. The Democrats got a candidate for President, who, as the scene opened, was getting more votes than any other nominee would have got, and will carry into office more local Democratic candidates than any other.

But if we go back of the convention and review the series of events during a year past, the Democrats have seen much pass away from them. Had Mr. Roosevelt a year ago followed the historic rule, had he gone on the assumption that, of course, no Democratic President would seek a third term, in defiance of party doctrine, and for another nomination, he would have been elected.

As I Was Saying

By DANIEL WHITEHEAD HICKY.

THE BUTTERFLY.

Upon a sunlit summer day
A butterfly came down to play,
And so we went a mile or two,
I guess, before each other knew
We were not going anywhere,
But only sought a breath of air.
And since a summer day is long
For one to do his right or wrong,
Perhaps we kept each other out
Of mischief we could be about,
For everywhere I looked I saw
This yellow brother, like the law,
Behind my path and now before,
Nor leaving me a yard or more.

Suddenly turning in my track
I gave a sigh and started back,
Passing flowers I hoped that he Would pause upon for a second
So I could dart upon my way
And stop wherever I chose to stay
For half an hour, an hour even,
Since man is free as wind from heaven,
But everywhere I looked he was,
A moving fire along the grass.
And back at home, and safe, that night,
Having shut him out as I would a light,
I got to thinking, in a way,
Perhaps that it was well that day
He followed me. I might have gone
Somewhere I should not go alone,
And but for his inquisitiveness,
My night be troubled more than this.

The sun-bright shores of Georgia, especially the tide-washed sands of its coastal islands, holds far more inhabitants than the annual array of summer transients who slip away from the cities, small towns and rural districts, for a week or 10 days or longer, to bask in the sun, to drink in the cool sea air, to acquire a coat of sunburn that sends the home looking like Tomichichi and his tribal brothers.

These year-round residents' names never slip into the social columns of the city or county newspapers. They are never written up, or photographed in connection with the doings of the luckier social-elects. At fashionable teas, cocktail parties or dinners their names are never mentioned. Completely overlooked, they must shuffle for themselves. No one pays them any mind.

Therefore, let us give them a break. Surely their goings-on, although most insignificant, as the scheme of things is measured to-day, must be of some importance to them. Flying over, or scampering across, or curling beneath a Sunday newspaper, long since discarded, surely they will come across, somewhere, at the time of their next summer movements. Therefore, let them be recorded:

The Natives.
Mr. and Mrs. Yellow Butterfly, after spending the morning in a hedge of pink oleanders, passed the afternoon above the blue hyacinths of a lily pool, finding much enjoyment there.

Mr. and Mrs. Brown Lizard, after a cool afternoon's nap beneath a canopy of saffron and scarlet zinnias, went down to the beach at high tide, turning to their petted umbrellas much refreshed.

Mr. and Mrs. Jackdaw, tiring of their nest in the magnolias overlooking the east marsh, have moved across the road to a loftier pent house, known as Lanier's Oak. They will be at home to their many friends between the hours of dusk and moonrise.

The White Herons, after a winter spent on the west coast of Florida, have returned to Sea Island, where they have joined their families for the annual summer reunion. A picnic, in the nature of a welcome-home, will be given by their feathered friends on the dunes at low tide.

Mr. and Mrs. Turtle, earliest settlers of the islands, annoyed by the constant encroachment upon their leisure and peace by the city dwellers, have paddled to Jekyll Island, where they will spend several weeks, returning to the mainland after Labor Day.

Mrs. Seahawk, who suffered a heart attack during the fireworks display at the casino on July 4th, is resting more easily at her leafy residence, above the Frederica road. Her many friends are wishing for her a speedy recovery.

Mr. Diamondback, who lost his wife on St. Simons causeway during a motorcade, has returned to Blackberry Patch for the balance of the season.

Mr. and Mrs. Sandpiper and their happy air-minded brood have returned to the beach after a brief sojourn on Brunswick and adjacent towns.

The Cricket Club.
All members of the Crickets' Club are requested to meet at the regular Friday night for their regular weekly practice. Lord Cricket, a newcomer, and an excellent bass, will be introduced to the gathering.

The Whippoorwill, after an absence of several nights, due to the recent violent thunderstorms, are being welcomed back to the marshes. It is hoped their visit to the islands will not again be interrupted.

Mr. and Mrs. Bee, after several weeks spent with the Canterbury Bells and the Larkins, are now visiting the Yuccas, latest reports stating they are having a most enjoyable time.

High tide, or low tide, life goes on down here at the islands, everyone enjoying generous proportions of sun and sea, the hand of beauty overlooking not even the smallest sand-fiddler, the frailest wind-blown petal, the tiniest shell harboring a single bead of spray from the tide!

Massachusetts Institute of Technology, as an engineer in stress analysis, has been announced by the Douglas Aircraft Corporation of Los Angeles, Cal. Dunning is the first Negro recommended for this type of work.

East Ties the West
When a runaway horse raced through Milton, Mass., streets, Patrolman Thomas Callahan stopped the animal with a lasso thrown from the running board of a pursuing police car.

Studies Snail Teeth.
Professor M. S. Briscoe of the department of biology at Storer College, Harpers Ferry, W. Va., recently completed a year's study of the development of microscopic teeth in snails at the United States National Museum in Washington, D. C. Briscoe is the first Negro to study there is residence.

The fine arts department of the Urban League of Pittsburgh presented the Urban League Community choir in its first public recital at the Schenley High school auditorium, Pittsburgh, recently.

The fine arts department is the newest of the Pittsburgh Urban League's departmental groups. It has adopted a long-range program, including the development of musical activities, painting, sculpture, literature and other cultural arts.

The presence in the city of a group of qualified musicians made the development of the Community Choir the first logical step in the work of this department.

Win Cash Awards.
Two Negroes were among three New York University students who won cash awards in the first competition sponsored by the Beaux-Arts Institute of Design and the Western Electric Company, Inc., for designs of one-kilowatt radio stations.

Ninety-two entries from 19 colleges and universities were judged by a jury composed of four architects and a radio designer.

Orphan Is Prize Winner.
A 14-year-old Negro orphan girl received a check for $150 with her diploma when she graduated from Junior High school 136, Manhattan, recently. The girl was Ursula Nelson, and the check represented the Rebecca Elsborg Memorial prize, awarded twice each year to two students in Manhattan for "A" record throughout her eight years of school life. She has served as a traffic aide, councilman and class officer, as well as being active in her church and in the Y. W. C. A. Her mother died in 1928 and her father in 1939.

W. C. T. U. of GeorgiaMrs. Mary Harris Armor,
Atlanta, Editor.

Mrs. J. M. Spinks, of Atlanta, state director of the speech contest department, writes: "Another 'home run' has been made in our game. On Sunday at the First Christian church amid a most appreciative audience of young people and adults, a group of five young ladies representing the speech contest department of the W. C. T. U., was presented in a silver medal contest by the director of the McPherson union."

Readings and orations were rendered in a splendid manner as evidenced by the generous applause given each youthful speaker. The contestants came from the different churches in the fifth district and were as follows: Misses Rachel Cawthon, Louise Hutchens, Juanita Tyner, Betty Bob Walters, and Lillian Tyner. The medal was awarded to Miss Lillian Tyner on the reading, "A Wise Decision." Mrs. Spinks is doing splendid work in this department, and should have the eager co-operation of every true W. C. T. U. worker and sympathizer. (M. H. A.)

From the quarterly report of Mrs. L. R. Prater, publicity director of the Fort Valley W. C. T. U., the following items were culled: "Mrs. W. R. Edwards, the president, brought an interesting report in full of Miss Bozeman's splendid work in our schools. She visited the high school and the colored college. With the co-operation of the school relations committee of the missionary society, a service was held at one of the colored churches."

A recent meeting was blessed with the presence of Mrs. George Matthews, whose health is much improved and who brought a message in Scripture, talk and prayer of profound spiritual significance. A meeting featured a beautiful flower mission program planned and led by Mrs. L. E. Williams, director of that department. The childhood of Frances E. Willard was reviewed, bringing out the lessons which she learned from fellowship with her parents; how they led her to find the God of tender care in nature, to enjoy flowers and realize their wonderful mission of love and service. The history and development of the flower mission department was given. Flowers were sent to the sick. Fort Valley is a "light line" or "go tell" union, and this quarter renewed their subscription to the Union Signal for our Fort Valley missionary in India and sent five dollars to the world's treasurer for temperance work in the mission field. The union presented highway safety tags to the city patrolmen."

Mrs. Robert Travelute, state recording secretary, visited Douglasville and Donalsonville last week and sold 26 tags in Douglasville and 41 in Donalsonville. Mrs. Olie McLarty helped her at Donalsonville.

For almost a year the W. M. S. of the Second-Ponce de Leon Baptist church, Dr. Ryland Knight, pastor, has given a place on its monthly program to temperance. A number of the women of this church are members of the Piedmont W. C. T. U., including Mrs. Knight, and Dr. Knight is an honorary member. Many also belong to the Peachtree Road W. C. T. U. Mrs. Lillian W. Moore, vice president of the Piedmont W. C. T. U., is chairman of temperance in the Second-Ponce de Leon Baptist church. She has had the following prominent W. C. T. U. workers speak on temperance during the past few months: Mesdames Mary Scott Russell, Mary Harris Armor, R. H. McDougall, Ryland Knight, Peter Manning, J. M. Spinks, E. A. Cawthon, Charles Robeson, A. Lee Hale, and Carter Wright of Alabama, also Miss Nancy Emery, one of the youthful members of this church. The speaker for August will be Miss Betty Grace Spinks, pearl medal winner in the recent state speech contest. She will render the selection with which she won the medal.

Mrs. R. L. Miller, state corresponding secretary, is touring the west, California being her chief objective. Mrs. McDougall reports three more districts over the top: The second, the seventh and the eighth north are gain districts.

Mr. & Mrs. W. A. Brown
Hold Open House.

Mr. and Mrs. William A. Brown recently celebrated their twentieth wedding anniversary at an open house at their home on East Harvard avenue in College Park. Cut flowers and ferns decorated the reception rooms, the table in the dining room being overlaid with a lace cloth and centered with a crystal bowl holding pastel flowers at either side of which were crystal candlesticks holding lighted pink tapers.

Mr. and Mrs. William T. Wheeler assisted in entertaining and Mrs. Charles B. Wheeler and Mrs. E. Reynolds Wheeler presided over the punch bowl. Miss Jean Wheeler kept the guest book.

Among the out-of-town guests present were Mr. and Mrs. H. A. Manning, of Columbia, S. C.; Miss Edith Ferrell, of Greelyville, S. C., and Charles Marsh, of Miami, Fla. A large group of friends called to felicitate the hosts during the receiving hours.

Mrs. E. M. Bailey Gives Report On Federation Extension

By MRS. E. M. BAILEY, of Acworth, Chairman of Federation Extension.

The following excellent report on club extension in Georgia Federation of Women's Clubs was given at the recent state convention in Gainesville by the state chairman, Mrs. E. M. Bailey, of Acworth:

"My services as chairman of the extension committee have now come to a close and it is thrilling to be able to report that during these two years 40 clubs have come into the federation.

"We have had Group 1, Group 2, Group 3 and Group 4, adult clubs. Groups that federate or affiliate with the federation in any way. In junior clubs we have had Group A, Group B and Group C, all the types of junior clubs. Every one of them has been given a most cordial welcome by the chairman of extension.

"As an extra thrill we report that memberships in clubs have been extended beyond our wildest expectations during the year now ending. Many clubs have increased their membership, a number have doubled theirs, and a few have gone beyond the membership of a year ago by leaps and bounds. There were added more than 500 new members in Group 1 clubs.

"District presidents, first vice presidents, club presidents and others interested in club extension have given the finest of co-operation. For example, we shall mention the unique service that Miss Irene Hackney, president of the Rabun Gap-Dillard Woman's Club, has given to her club and to the federation. Miss Hackney and her members have taken the club, with its constructive program, to women members in remote rural areas. This club has increased its membership many fold and it has also given them a new interest in life and placed them in contact with other women and their interests throughout the world.

"During the year, I have had the privilege and pleasure, in the company of Mrs. Hill, Mrs. Butler and Mrs. Shingler, of being present at a meeting in each district and of speaking on club extension. Again the grand finale of these pleasurable visits to the clubwomen throughout the state, was our visit to our very own Tallulah Falls school. We had there the joy of speaking to the students and of having them entertain us in many charming ways.

"A new experience was mine during the year, the experience of being present at the three state club institutes. At Athens, Macon and Valdosta. The pleasure of being a guest at the incomparable trustee dinners of the Tallulah Falls school has been given to me and at the February dinner I had the honor of being presented as an elected trustee of the school. I have been present at the executive board meetings as well as all the meetings of the executive committee."

The Rabun Gap-Dillard Woman's Club, Miss Irene Hackney, president, was given the cash trophy offered by Mrs. E. M. Bailey for club membership extension and the cash trophy offered by the federation for club extension was awarded the fifth district. Mrs. Chester Martin was the first vice president of this district, and is the recently elected president of the district.

Dallas Club Fetes Mrs. Ralph Butler

A social affair of state-wide interest was the recent open house at the Dallas Woman's clubhouse, honoring Mrs. Ralph Butler, a member and past club president, who has been elected president of the Georgia Federation of Women's Clubs.

Color scheme of yellow and white was carried out in the artistic house decorations. The table was overlaid with a lace cloth and had for a central decoration a silver bowl, holding yellow and white summer flowers, with low candlesticks and white tapers completing the arrangement.

Receiving with Mrs. Butler were Mrs. M. B. Sell, president of Dallas Woman's Club, and Mesdames W. F. Byrd, C. A. Hart, J. W. Hay Jr., C. B. McGarity and W. C. Sams, all former presidents.

Costumed Junior Club girls who assisted in serving were: Sally Price, Elizabeth Johns, Annette Denton, Gloria and Joyce Henderson, Frances Couch, Juanita Harris and Margaret Hutchens.

Those calling congratulated the club and Dallas for having in Mrs. Butler such an outstanding clubwoman and citizen.

Presents Program On Citizenship

The July meeting of the Colbert Woman's Club was held in the High school auditorium. A very appropriate program on citizenship was presented by Mrs. J. C. Hardman. Patriotic songs were sung by the entire club, and special songs were sung by Mrs. G. L. Loden, Mrs. Elmo Hardman and Mrs. E. R. Hart. Mrs. M. R. Leard gave an interesting talk on the fundamentals of good citizenship, and Mrs. J. K. Brookshire led the salute to the flag.

After the program, the club assembled at the home of Mrs. J. E. Benton, where refreshments were served by Mrs. Benton, Mrs. Homer McClellan and Mrs. Wyatt Benton.

The June meeting was held at the home of Mrs. Howard Brown in Hull, with Mrs. Cleo Morris and Miss Lois Johnson serving as co-hostesses. The principal speaker was Hope P. Davis, superintendent-elect of the Madison county schools, who gave a very interesting talk on the educational needs of the county and state. After the business meeting and program, refreshments were served by the hostesses.

Clubwomen Meet In Jeffersonville.

"Highlights of General Robert E. Lee's life was the subject discussed by Mrs. E. S. Fitzpatrick at the July meeting of the Jeffersonville Woman's Club.

"Debutante at a Country Dance" was the reading given by Miss Katie Frances Whitehurst. Mrs. O. T. Chapman gave the devotional. The president, Mrs. C. A. Dugan, presided. It was voted to give $1 to the Red Cross and $1 a month for incidentals for a county health nurse.

Mrs. A. A. Duncan, Mrs. A. S. Davis and Mrs. Jack Wardlaw are new members.

The meeting was held at the public library, with Mrs. T. E. Methvin and Miss Margaret Miller acting as hostesses.

Beall-Love.

EATONTON, Ga., July 20.—In a ceremony marked with simplicity, Miss Wattie Beall was married to Harry Love, of Dalton, at the home of the bride near here today.

Franklin Clubs Meet in Ashland

Franklin County Federation of Women's Clubs met in Ashland for the July meeting with the Ashland Home Demonstration Club as hostess. There were 103 members and visitors present. The opening address was given by Mrs. Leon Hutchens, president of the Ashland club, who introduced Mrs. John Henry Mize, also of the Ashland club. Mrs. Mize gave the welcome address, ending with the poem "Knowing Each Other Better." Mrs. Brantley Little, of Carnesville, gave the response.

The federation was called to order by Mrs. Stewart Brown, of Royston, who presided in the absence of the president and first vice president. Each club gave reports of activities and special projects. A most interesting report was given by Miss A. B. Haslett, home demonstration agent, who announced that 176 applications for mattresses had been approved and that by this week she hopes to make 30 mattresses a day at the two centers, Carnesville and Red Hill. The federation voted, at Miss Haslett's suggestion, to pay the expenses of one girl to the H-H Club conference in Athens. Welfare committee reported much useful work done and much more to be done.

After the business session, an interesting program was given. Theron Mize spoke on "The Changing World." The main address and topic for discussion was the county library. Rush Burton, editor of the Lavonia Times, addressed the federation, stressing the value of the county library, especially the traveling branch. Credit for this traveling library goes to Mr. Burton, who felt the need of free library service in the rural sections of Franklin county. The fact that 1,200 books were loaned during the month of June is indicative of the success of this movement. Many business and civic organizations of the county are making this their project for next year. The federation is co-operating wholeheartedly with this movement.

Clubwomen Meet In Stone Mountain.

Stone Mountain Woman's Club held its July meeting at the home of Mrs. J. F. McCurdy, with Miss Grace and Anyrene McCurdy assisting. The president, Mrs. J. C. Jordan, presided and Mrs. Ralph McClellan read the collect. Roll call was answered with favorite flowers.

Recommendations accepted from the executive board were the letter of welcome composed by Miss Grace McCurdy be multi-graphed and sent to newcomers in the town; that each member boost "Woman's Club Day." Mrs. J. C. Jordan announced the meeting to observe the celebration of the golden jubilee of General Federation of Women's Clubs. Finance committee report was made by Mrs. J. T. Harris.

Reporting for the clean-up committee, Mrs. C. D. Johnson stated that the members had called on every merchant and each was co-operative in keeping the town cleaner. The president appointed a committee for the annual outdoor meeting held each August at the home of Mrs. Ralph McClellan. The program chairman introduced as speaker, Mrs. Fletcher Pearson Crown, of Decatur, who gave an enjoyable and instructive talk on "Flower Arrangement."

Water Pageant To Be Given By Girls at Camp Highland

Parents and friends of Camp Highland are invited to visit the Y. W. C. A. camp this afternoon to attend a special demonstration of skill and sportsmanship and to hear Rev. Wiley Scott, of Central Congregational church, conduct the twilight vesper service at 5 o'clock.

At 3 o'clock, Miss Marie Stalker, assisted by Miss Frances Radford, will direct a water pageant portraying a prince and a princess, who, in their search for romance, are beset by greedy sharks. Summoning his brave army of porpoises, the prince will rescue his lady and will receive the watery blessings of the king and queen. There will be a wedding in the pool, with Miss Betty Ann Brooks playing Lohengrin on the accordion. The king's celebration before this event will demonstrate formation front and back crawl, front dives and the nine strokes of swimming. The nine-year-old campers in Clover Club will be featured and the life-savers will present a special formation. At the pageant's close, Red Cross certificates will be awarded.

Miss Mary Elise Crowe and Miss Miriam Loeb will preside as king and queen; Miss Joan Hungerford will be the prince and Miss Anne Radford, the princess. Trumpeters will be Miss Margaret Stewart and Miss Joyce Slate.

By special arrangements visitors may watch "usual classes" held so that they may see the development of skills and the keen interest in sports. Miss Imogene Grant will conduct an archery class; Miss Grace Wilbanks will put her horseback riders through their paces and Miss Hilda Wright will present her tennis pupils. Miss Virginia Collar and Miss Margaret Stewart will exhibit handicraft articles.

The dramatic and music classes are working on a play to be given in July 30, when parents and friends will be invited back to celebrate Highland day. Written by a committee composed of Miss Sara Lawrence, Miss Virginia Collar, Miss Renee Grizzelle and Miss Elizabeth Carr, "Come to the Fair" will attract "tourists" who are journeying from Atlanta to Smyrna. Folk dances, side shows, songs, exhibits, a shooting gallery and many other features will depict the originality, ingenuity and talent with which campers entertain themselves and their audiences.

In addition to regular classes, campers are entertained in the evening with supper hikes, stunt nights, impersonations and campfire singing. Wednesday evening Clover Club won first prize for the most original impersonation of "Lil Abner and Daisy Mae," and the harmonizing trio, composed of Joyce Slate, Frances Spain and Jacquelin Garner, who imitated the Andrews Sisters of radio fame, were called back for repeated encores. Saturday evening the junior assistants were hostesses at a dance in the open-air recreational hall.

Tuesday, July 23, is the last day in which junior campers may register. Beginning August 3, Camp Highland will be reserved exclusively for girls and women over 18 years of age.

In a cocoa brown moire ensemble featuring a full-length coat and a white blouse. Matching accessories and a shoulder spray of gardenias and valley lilies completed the costume. Her only ornament was an antique locket, a diamond and gold locket.

Historic Cave Draws Visitors To Illinois Park

Ohio River Site Once Was Headquarters for Pirates.

At the southern end of Illinois state highway No. 1, on the Illinois bank of the Ohio river in Hardin county, is located Cave-In-Rock state park. The scene along the river bank is one of rocky chaos, with the footpath threading its meandering way between massive boulders lying where they fell from the cliffs extending high overhead.

A few hundred yards from the park entrance is the cavern which gives the park its name—Cave-In-Rock. The opening is high in the cliff face, well above the highest floodmarks. Straight back into the solid rock extends the depth of the cave, 108 feet from the entrance to the inner wall. The comparative narrowness of the entrance belies the spaciousness of the interior, which widens out into a huge room of rock.

Today the park area is a scene of gaiety on pleasant weekends and holidays, with the happy voices of vacationers echoing in the cave. The past history of Cave-In-Rock, however, is directly opposite to the present-day scene.

More than a hundred years ago, bands of river pirates made their headquarters here, swooping out to pillage the busy commerce on the Ohio river, then the main artery of trade from the east to the newly settled west, and to the markets of the south. These bands were finally dispersed.

No matter what you wish to buy or rent, a Constitution Want Ad will surely find it. The cost is small and oh, what a time-saver!

Resort Trade Up At St. Petersburg

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla., July 20.—An increase of 55 per cent over last year in this resort's summer tourist business is the result of an intelligent newspaper advertising campaign directed at the most difficult target of all—the preconceived ideas of large masses of the people.

Go south to cool off? The thought seemed fantastic to the average summer vacationist, in spite of the evidence, in the form of government weather charts, showing St. Petersburg's maximum temperatures many degrees below those of northern states between May and October.

This summer, St. Petersburg will entertain 25,000 visitors, the great majority of whom would have shrunk from the idea of a summer in the south, only a few years ago.

National Park System Ready For Tourists

Campgrounds in South and West Have Added Accommodations.

Throughout the national park system generally the summer tourist season is in full swing, with campgrounds, lodges and hotels newly refurbished and open, buses ready to transport visitors, and prospective park ranger forces augmented by hundreds of temporary rangers known in park service vernacular as "90-day-wonders."

Muir Woods National monument, California, almost at the back door of San Francisco's World's Fair, anticipates greater crowds than the toll charge on the entrance road has been discontinued.

Yosemite National Park, also in California, is prepared for record crowds. The recent opening of Crystal Cave, seven miles from nearby Giant Forest in Sequoia National Park, adds another interesting feature to a trip to this famous area of giant trees, lofty mountains, and clear lakes. The cave, in which a lighting system has been installed, will be open every day during the summer season.

Outstanding among the new tourist accommodations completed since the 1939 season is the fine lodge at Bandelier National Monument, New Mexico's splendid cliff-dwelling ruins, in the heart of Frijoles (Little Beans) canyon, northwest of Santa Fe.

Construction on the huge Blue Ridge parkway project, which will link Shenandoah and Great Smoky Mountain National Parks, has gone forward with great rapidity. About 140 miles of paved highway are now open between Adney Gap, Va., and Deep Gap, N. C., and shorter sections have been completed south of Shenandoah National Park and northeast of Asheville, N. C.

Mohawk Valley Offers Visitors Historical Sites

Niagara Falls, Hudson River, Adirondacks May Be Seen.

One of the greatest scenic-historical routes in North America is the Mohawk valley, the "Gateway of the West," the only low pass, between the Atlantic and the Great Lakes passing through the Appalachian ranges. Chief of these scenic places, they point out, is Niagara Falls, while a chain of other attractive features line the 5 and 5S routes, from Buffalo to Albany and thence on, along the Hudson river to New York City.

Notable historical points, directly on or close to 5 and 5S, are old Fort Niagara, in the Niagara Falls neighborhood, the Finger Lake, Rome, where the first American battleflag was unfurled on Fort Stanwix on August 3, 1777; the battlefield of Oriskany, site of "bloodiest battle" of the Revolution, August 6, 1777; Fort Herkimer, built in 1787 and chief site of Walker Edmonds' "Drums Along the Mohawk"; General Horner's Homestead, 1787; Canajoharie Art Gallery, with its wonderful replica of Rembrandt's "Night Watch"; Johnson Hall, 1762, and Fort Johnson, 1749, built by Sir William Johnson and the only baronial mansions standing in the United States; the battlefield of Saratoga, where America won her liberties, 25 miles north of Albany, capital city of New York state with a Hudson river seaport 150 miles from the Atlantic Ocean.

The motorist driving east can detour on Route 5S, east of Utica, for Rome, site of Fort Stanwix (1755). The route to Utica takes the tourist past Oriskany Battlefield, a decisive American victory of the Revolution. At Utica, deour is made, over New York State Route 12, the Thousand Islands and the bridge to Canada, to the western Adirondacks and southward into the northwestern Susquehanna basin. Utica, which is the site of the Schuyler, is called the "Crossroads of New York State," because of its strategic highways.

Lead Into Adirondacks.
Herkimer, Mohawk and Little Falls have highways leading north into the Adirondacks and southward into the Susquehanna valley and Canadago Lake. The Fort Herkimer Church, on Route 5S, main site of Edmonds' novel "Drums Along the Mohawk," built in 1787, is opposite Herkimer.

Important and interesting historical anniversaries, of the Mohawk valley, will be celebrated during 1940. Chief of these is the 180th anniversary of the march of Amherst's American-British army of 10,000 men, through the Mohawk valley starting from Scotia June 19, 1760, to the capture of Montreal and conquest of Canada, September 8, 1760. This was one of the greatest events in world history, as it made North America an English-speaking continent. In the intensively developed dairying region of the Mohawk valley, the centennial of the Montgomery County Agricultural Society is of much importance. It will start at Fonda on Saturday, August 31, and continue through Labor Day and including Tuesday, September 3. An interesting celebration of the burning of Schenectady in 1690 is planned for the summer.

Luxury, Poverty, Science and Superstition Below the Rio Grande.

By MITCHELL COX.
Professor of English, Georgia Tech.
South of the winding Rio Grande, curled against the warm gulf like a sleeping child cuddled in the lap of a thousand romantic legends, lies a land of startling and gigantic contrasts, Mexico, where luxury and penury, science and superstition, the 20th century and the 15th century unceasingly challenge each other for supremacy over 15,000,000 Spaniards, Indians and mestizos.

Everywhere this sharp contrast is apparent. From the copper sky of sultry Vera Cruz, where bananas, pineapples, mangos and other tropical fruits are in lush munificence, it is but a few short hours' ride up the giant Sierras to Mexico City, sprawled across a plateau 8,300 feet above sea level, where fir and spruce hug the ground and residents sleep often beneath two blankets.

Country of Flowers.
God gave bountifully to Mexico. Flowers seem to bloom everywhere. Around Orizaba and Fortin, hung along the mountains halfway from Mexico City to Vera Cruz, gardenias, camellias and orchids are in such riotous profusion that the air is heavy with their perfume.

At every village where the crowded trains of ancient heritage stop, native women and children crowd the coaches by the scores, offering heaping baskets of flowers for sale. Among these mixed country folk, blended from Spanish and from Indian blood, superstition runs rampant. Fearful worship of the ancient gods, awe of Quetzalcoatl somehow intricately interwoven with superstitious love and worship of Jehovah, make them objects of unceasing wonder to American tourists.

Fear Photographers.
Many, for example, solemnly believe that having one's picture taken will automatically produce headaches and other pains, or perhaps even death. Thus, many will do anything to avoid having their pictures taken.

But even in this century-old superstition, inherited from the Aztecs and Toltecs, there is worship as Americans know it. All these people hope some day to make their way to the capital, where they may touch and pray to the shrine of Guadalupe, the religious, moral and national heart and soul of all Mexico.

To Guadalupe all turn in time of trial. Housed in a beautiful cathedral in Mexico City, Guadalupe's image stands in a glass case ironically lighted with Neon tubes! But all Mexicans will sooner or later go to her, for she is to Mexicans as Mecca is to Mohammedans.

Old New Mingle.
From out the tropic and semitropic regions up from Vera Cruz the curling railroad winds tortuously through the precipitous mountains, past Orizaba and Popocatepetl, past the Sleeping Lady mountain like Fujiyama in eternal snow, and darts along the long plateau to Mexico City, a city of over one and one-half millions, a city beautiful to behold, mingling.

PRIDE OF HAVANA—The magnificent National theater in Havana, Cuba, scene of the Rotarians' convention meetings in June and where more than 6,000 Lions are to gather for their convention July 23-25. Cuba is rapidly coming to the fore as a popular summer resort, and travel agents throughout the south report heavy bookings.

like Havana, the old Spanish culture with the broad, tree-lined avenues and the sharp-cut modern buildings of our own time.

Here in deep-cut contrast to the luxurious country peopled with poverty-stricken peasants are to be found the culture and wealth, the modern luxuries, of a people who have well learned how to live gracefully.

Through the verdancy of Chapultepec park in the heart of the city, ringing the heights on which stands the palace of former Emperor Maximilian and Empress Carlotta, each Sunday morning the rich caballeros ride.

Citizens Apathetic.
Surprising, in view of the stories which come from Mexico, is the political cynicism or apathy of the average voter. "Me vote?" a cab driver asked. "What's the use? All the candidates are nothing but crooks, anyhow. Nobody cares who gets elected except a few people who expect to get something out of it."

Within a short distance of Mexico City may be seen many monuments to a former civilization. The great Pyramids of the Sun and of the Moon, the Pyramid of Teotihuacan, the huge stone temples erected many years ago, are only a short drive from the heart of the city.

Also only a few miles from the city are the lovely floating gardens of Xochimilco, once floating islands covered in flowers, but now patches of land rooted between lovely canals.

Winding from Mexico City to the Pacific, a treacherous and mountainous road along which natives hurl their cars with a disregard for human life almost negligible.

Great Smoky Modern Ship Park Restricts Offers Comfort Overnight Stay On Mississippi

Tourists, However, Have Ample Opportunity To View Wonders.

Tourist facilities within the boundaries of the Great Smoky Mountains national park, in North Carolina and Tennessee, will be limited to automobile camping grounds and picnic areas, under a policy approved by Secretary of the Interior Harold I. Ickes.

Because of its elongated shape, and its location, plus its limited road mileage, a visitor can adequately see that part of the park accessible by road without the necessity of stopping overnight within its boundaries. Thus the National Park Service of the Department of the Interior is given an unusual opportunity to develop a large wilderness park without the intrusion of the customary tourist facilities.

Hotels, lodges, and cabins located at points near the park boundaries in both North Carolina and Tennessee now afford accommodations, easily reached within short driving time from any point on the park roads. It is believed that with the assurance of Secretary Ickes that the government will not compete with the operation of private housing operations in the vicinity, there will be an increase in both the number and quality of such facilities.

Under the newly announced policy, the only concession that may be considered inside the Great Smoky Mountains National Park is the provision of small stores in the campground and picnic areas, should experience later prove these essential to the enjoyment and use of the park visitors. Granting of such concessions, however, will be dependent upon a showing of actual need, after operation of such areas for a sufficient length of time accurately to gauge the visitors' requirements.

Because the Haunch and Venison, oldest inn in Salisbury, England, lost all its tankards to trophy-hunting soldiers in World War I, chains with padlocks are now run through the handles of the pewter, brass and glass tankards which hang from the smoke-blackened beams.

Modern Electrical Kitchen Equipment Is Both Convenient and Economical

Up-to-Date Stove and Refrigerator Essential in Home.

Living has become simplified and streamlined by modern electrical equipment. And while the first and most obvious advantages are comfort and convenience, there are other advantages equally important; modern kitchen equipment has vastly changed woman's life. From a virtual slave, who spent most of her waking hours over an old range and with problems of refrigerating food, the modern woman who lunches downtown, goes to school-improvement meetings, clubs, bridge and is companionable with her family, has emerged. She has done this through the advantages of improved home equipment.

The center of the home is the kitchen and a kitchen to get excited about is one that invites the family in by being a joyful place to work and a room to be proud of. In these days when parties start in the living room but soon move into the kitchen the kitchen has become more and more the real focal point in family life.

Modern electric stoves that cook merely by turning a switch are a far cry from the wood and coal stoves that served a by-gone generation. Now the modern woman has time to be a gracious hostess to afternoon guests, while a hearty dinner for the family is unobtrusively cooking. With up-to-date electrical equipment, she can enjoy her family, play with them, give with them, find time to attend club meetings, read the books and magazines as they come out and not two years later. Once you discover the luxuriousness of cooking in a cool kitchen with half the effort, cost and worry the chances are you will be a different person in a big way. The electric stove saves time, not by minutes, but hours. You can walk out in your dinner and come back later to find that dinner waiting, delicious and hot, ready to serve. Many of the foods for oven meals can be prepared right after breakfast, kept ready in cooking utensils in your electric refrigerator until time for them to go into the oven. And operating an electric oven is as easy as snapping on an electric lamp. The scientific construction which controls the heat and the moisture of the electric oven gives the same results now, tomorrow, next year. The heating units on top of your electric range store up enough heat when the current is on to cook foods long after you snap the switch off and if you're even the least bit Scotch you'll welcome this idea of cooking without current. The electric stove helps safeguard your family's health and delights their appetites with its cleanliness, its perfectly cooked foods chock-full of important vitamins and minerals.

The electric refrigerator belongs in every kitchen as a matter of sheer economy. It eliminates the waste of spoiled food, it saves money. It provides a temperature low enough to keep foods safe for many days. It's this dependable low temperature that enables you to save money by stocking up in bargains—to save last-minute hurry by preparing foods in advance. With such a storehouse you can buy the meats your butcher is featuring at special prices, the fruits and vegetables you'll want to buy at quantity and bargain prices. Your electric refrigerator will keep any unused portions until you're ready to use them days later. All this special service you get from your electric refrigerator besides its invaluable in chilling fruit and vegetable slices, melon balls and other appetizers, in jelling soups and salads, and desserts, in making ice cubes to tinkle in tall glasses, in freezing an astounding variety of creams, mousses, sherbets and parfaits.

The modern equipment no longer lets the kitchen be a drab, cheerless workroom. The modern woman no longer carries a public burden of extra kitchen time and extra work when inexpensive, up-to-date equipment can cut that burden in two. An investment in electric stove and refrigerator is an investment in savings, health, comfort, convenience and hours of joyous relaxation and fun.

FAUCET LOCATION. A multiplicity of house bibbs or faucets in a garden and around a house is a great convenience to the home gardener. To have at least one on each side of the house and, here the yard is deep or wide, one or two well away from the house puts every part of the yard within a comparatively short length of hose.

FHA Homes $4,817,600 on Started in July Georgia Homes Breaks Record First 6 Months

Week of July 13 Topped Any Similar Period in FHA History.

More new homes were started under Federal Housing Administration inspection in the week ended July 13 than in any similar period in the FHA's history. Administrator Stewart McDonald announced from Washington Saturday.

At the same time applications for mortgage insurance covering new homes to be built under FHA inspection continued at levels far ahead of the comparable 1939 period.

During the second week in July FHA-inspected construction began on 4,253 new homes which are being financed with loans insured under Title II of the national housing act. In addition, there were 230 homes started which are being financed with loans insured under Title I of the act.

This was a gain of 48 per cent over the 2,870 Title II homes started in the same week of 1939; no comparable figure is available for the number of Title I homes started for the same period since FHA inspection was not then required.

The 4,253 figure exceeded the previous record of 4,125 set in the week ended May 11. The highest week reached in 1939 was the period ended July 22 at 3,122.

Mr. McDonald attributed the record number of homes started in the week partly to work held back by the July 4 holiday, but chiefly to the sustained high level of FHA insuring operations.

During the same week there were 4,680 applications for mortgage insurance involving new homes to be built under FHA inspection. This compared with 3,397 in the same week of 1939 and with the 1939 record of 4,268 at the end of March. The gain over the corresponding week of 1939 was 38 per cent.

Mr. McDonald pointed out that applications involving new homes have topped 1939 for every one of the last 20 weeks and have substantially exceeded 4,000 each week with the exception of the two holidays. The highest week was 5,342 in the period ended May 4.

Mr. Griffin, a native of Atlanta, is returning to private endeavor after two and a half years with the Federal Housing Administration. Prior to that time he was prominently identified with the construction business of this city for more than 20 years. Among his achievements are the construction of Glenn Memorial church at Emory University, Emory Library, Georgia Tech stadium, Ponce de Total of 1,232 Mortgages Issued by FHA Since First of Year.

Showing a 9 per cent increase in volume and nearly 8 per cent in number over last year, a total of 1,232 mortgages aggregating $4,817,600, on Georgia homes were insured during the first six months this year by the Federal Housing Administration, R. E. Matheson, FHA state director, reported today. Nearly 80 per cent of the total mortgages insured were on new homes, built subject to inspection by FHA staff architects to ascertain that full compliance was given FHA minimum construction requirements.

The new home mortgages numbered 972 aggregating $3,902,900, an increase of nearly 15 per cent in both number and volume over the first half of 1939 when 847 mortgages, totaling $3,342,900 on new homes were insured.

Matheson also reported that on June 30, there were 599 outstanding commitments to insure mortgages which had not been closed. Of these, 547, or 96 per cent were on new homes. He said the proportion of new homes to the total number of insured mortgages has shown a substantial gain over a considerable period with 80 per cent of this year's business being on new homes as compared with 72 per cent for the first half of 1939 and only 30 per cent for the first half of 1938.

"By reducing the risks involved in home loan transactions, to an absolute minimum, the Federal Housing Administration has greatly expanded the market for homes in Georgia," Matheson declared. "This expansion has resulted in broadened opportunities for home ownership, especially among those families with modest incomes, who with a small initial payment can acquire their own home at no greater monthly expense than their present rent bill. It is this class of family that the FHA is especially interested in assisting to home ownership."

Watch Sources Of Obsolescence

Obsolescence in a house may be caused by a number of factors. Among these factors are: (1) New inventions and discoveries; (2) changes in the preferences and tastes of the public with regard to styles of architecture, geographical locations as places of residence, extent of plumbing facilities in residences, sizes of rooms, heights of ceiling, etc.; (3) encroachment of incongruous uses, as when commercial and industrial enterprises are introduced into residential neighborhoods; (4) infiltration into residential districts of lower-living standards; (5) failure of substantial numbers of property owners in the district to maintain their properties in good condition.

Backyard Can Be Most Popular 'Room' in House in Summertime

Americans are paying more attention to their "backyards." There was a time when the area back of the house, in nine out of 10 American homes, on almost any street in any community was a collection of woodsheds, stables, burned piles, chicken yards and debris. Within the last 10 years there has been a steady growth of the idea that, having paid for the yard, it should perform some service to every-day living during at least three months of the year.

Just as the once wasted attic and basement space inside the house is now being turned to useful purpose, so the land around the residence can be inexpensively rearranged to offer relief from constant interior confinement.

The first requirement for outdoor living quarters is privacy, which is best accomplished with a fence. Either the high type or the smaller, less expensive picket types are suitable. Next comes shelter from the sun, which may be in the form of a pergola, an awning-covered terrace or a summer house. Furniture for the garden is economical and can often be built at home.

Here are a few suggestions which may help in the location and planning of your summer living room:

If you want to have the feeling of being right in the garden, build your stone terrace floor level with the surrounding ground. This will not interfere with the lawn-mowing. Locate your summer living room where it can be conveniently reached from the kitchen, or provide an outdoor fireplace. Provide the summer living room with some light, movable partitions or wood screens, three-quarter room height, which will permit the family to eat beyond the gaze of passers-by and which, if available in sufficient number, can be used for arranging midday sun-bathing quarters. Have plenty of tables and at least one which is 4'x6'.

Of course, you cannot start from scratch and expect to provide perfect summer living quarters in one season because, instead of wallpaper, curtains and rugs, the interior decorations are composed of grass, shrubbery, hedges, trees and flowers. Make your start this year with the necessary yard enclosure—the fence. This is equivalent to the walls of your normal living room.

DO YOU KNOW that on the Want Ad pages of The Constitution a man is advertising who wants to lay your new cement walk or do any kind of concrete work?

3-Room Houses With Lot Sold For Only $1,575

Detail for Their Erection Set Out in Statement From FHA.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 20. Gratifying progress in the campaign to provide livable small homes at prices within reach of families with small incomes is being made, Federal Housing Administrator Stewart McDonald said today.

"Among the latest indications of this progress," he said, "is the information from our Louisville office that a group of 40 houses at Owensboro, Ky., has been built and sold, complete with lot, at $1,575 for the three-room houses and $1,750 for the four-room houses.

"All except the model houses were sold before construction started, and the enterprise was such a success that the same company has started another group of 60 houses and a rival developer is planning a group of 40 more to sell in the same price range.

"How far the building industry has progressed is shown by the fact that $6,000 was regarded as a low price in many areas when the FHA was established six years ago. And when the FHA booklet, 'Principles of Planning Small Houses' was published in 1933, the with plans for houses costing around $2,500 to build, many experienced developers thought us visionary."

It was pointed out that these $1,575 houses are soundly built livable homes. The advertisements offering them for sale carried the following statement:

"Buyer Protection: House to be 100 per cent inspected by Federal Housing Administration before conveying to purchaser. House to be built in strict accordance with FHA specifications and local building code."

Each of these houses occupies a lot 50 by 80 feet, it was stated, has an exterior varying somewhat from its neighbors, is about 26 feet from the house on each side, and is set well back from the street.

Also, each has a double roof of asphalt shingles and roof-felt over sheathing, finished oak hardwood floors, sand-finish tinted plaster walls, gas heater and 30-gallon hot water tank, built-in bathtub, drain-type kitchen sink and built-in cabinet, metal angle lath at all corners and openings to prevent plaster cracks, and ample closet space. The four-room house also has an extra utility room large enough for storage, laundry or other purposes.

All the houses are eligible for FHA - insured financing under either Title I or Title II of the National Housing Act.

PRIVACY FOR PORCHES.

At this time of year much thought is given to methods of screening porches and terraces from public view.

The planting of a row of tall annual-blooming plants is one way of accomplishing this. If the screen effect is to be permanent, the planting may be of shrubbery forming a hedge.

MODERNIZATION—See above what can be done to make a new home out of an old house. The changes shown have added much to the beauty and value of this home.

Siding that is dingy, worn out and in need of painting makes a home look down at the heels and seriously depreciates its value. Often you can make a new home out of an old house simply by adding bright, colorful new siding, and by making a few minor changes in the contours of your home's exterior.

A choice of many different siding materials is offered the homeowner. Asbestos cement, stucco or wood siding are among the most frequently used. Brick is also a possibility—and a very good one—but if it is applied to the outside of a wood sheathed house the homeowner should remember that rather elaborate additions to the foundations are necessary to support the weight of the brick.

Asbestos cement siding can be had in a great variety of patterns and colors. The three principal designs are known as "wavy butt siding," "thatch butt siding" and "clapboard siding." In addition to being fireproof, asbestos sidings have either smooth or wood grain texture. They are hard and durable and it is possible to eliminate periodic painting bills by asking your dealer for a siding that has a permanently waterproof, baked, glazed surface. Such sidings are being manufactured now.

Wood siding is economical, light in weight and lends itself very well to many different styles of architecture.

Stucco is fireproof and is applied to the outside of a house much as plaster is applied to the inside. You are offered a wide variety of choices in surface texture and color when stucco is used and beautiful results may be obtained.

In selecting a type of siding to use, the homeowner should weigh carefully the following points: First, will it fit the architecture and surroundings of the home? Second, how about upkeep—will it require the expense of periodic repainting? Third, will it give the fire protection a home should have?

Georgia Real Estate Men Can Perform Public Service

FHA State Director Matheson Reminds Them of Opportunity To Find Building Lots for Erection of Low-Cost Homes.

The Federal Housing Administration's low-cost home program affords Georgia real estate men an excellent opportunity to perform a public service, R. E. Matheson, FHA state director, stated Saturday. He pointed out that the immediate need for thousands of low-cost homes in the $3,000 and under price range, creates an equally urgent need for sites on which to build these homes.

"There can be no doubt," he asserted, "that there is an urgent demand throughout the state for this type of home. Homes which are modern in every respect, but at a sufficiently low cost as to place them within the means of those thousands of Georgia families with modest incomes.

The state director pointed out that since the value of the dwelling built under the FHA low-cost home program necessarily is limited, so there must be a maximum amount which may be allowed for acquisition of the location. "And therein lies the opportunity for the real estate fraternity," he declared.

Dealers Best Equipped.

Real estate dealers and brokers in Georgia are best equipped and able to assist in the developing of neighborhoods and communities for this type of home. These areas must meet the FHA minimum property requirements for this type of development, yet must not be prohibitive in price for low-cost homes. If raw areas are to be developed for the low-cost homes, then neither can the initial cost of the tract, nor the cost of improvements be excessive lest the cost of the improved property be too great for this class dwelling.

"For with the value of the house and lot limited to a maximum of $3,000, including all improvements, under our low-cost home program, the cost of the site must be kept at an absolute minimum in order that the maximum in size and quality can be contained in the dwelling.

Must Have Conveniences.

"All locations for low-cost homes must have similar qualifications to assure their desirability for residential uses over a long period, as the sites for homes in the higher price brackets. These qualifications include: Accessibility to adequate transportation facilities; appropriate and necessary utilities and street improvements; convenience to school, churches and shopping and recreation centers, and protection afforded by planning and zoning regulations and by protective covenants.

"Already the Federal Housing Administration has been directly responsible for the construction of more than 7,000 new homes in Georgia and each of these new dwellings required a site. Most of these sites were sold through a member of the state's real estate industry, and these sales have largely aided in stimulating the market for homesites throughout the state.

"Today," there is a market for thousands of additional homesites in Georgia. Homesites on which new dwellings will be started immediately. But the major portion of this market is for lots, sufficiently low in cost as to permit the construction of low-cost homes on them. Development of this market is the opportunity which the Federal Housing Administration has provided the state's real estate industry."

Lawn Relieves That Bare Look

Important as the planting of the lawn and garden are to the effectiveness of the completed home, they represent expenditures which may be made gradually.

To take away the look of bareness which seems to inevitably surround new construction a few expenses for planting may be included in the initial cost of the house.

As soil differs greatly in various locations, it is difficult to estimate accurately the expense of obtaining a good lawn. If a basement has been excavated for the house and good top soil exists the top soil should be saved in a pile to be spread over the subgrade of the whole lot.

The use of a certain amount of fertilizer is almost a necessity in many cases. Often a more permanent lawn will result if it is first seeded with clover or some other rough legume and turned over when the growth is heavy.

It may be necessary to delay the seeding of the lawn a year on this account. Meanwhile this rough growth will relieve bareness and will also keep down dust and mud.

Rails for Inside Cellar Stairways

All inside cellar stairs should have a hand rail on at least one side. It need not be fancy, but should be sturdy.

Four-by-four or even two-by-four posts as newels securely fastened to the carriage or support of the stairs, with a stout wooden rail well nailed will be inexpensive to install and will save many a dangerous fall.

'Deep-Freeze' New Frosted-Food Locker

Contrivance Which Will Hold Food as Low as 20 Degrees Below Zero.

The long-expected introduction of a household frosted-food locker box is at hand.

A two-year engineering program has culminated in the development of a circular locker which will hold food at temperatures ranging from zero to 20 degrees below zero, when the locker is placed in a room of normal temperature.

Christened "Deep-Freeze," the engineers' locker is being manufactured in a North Chicago plant.

Introduction of a home locker box has been long expected. Already more than a million American families are using lockers located in central cold-storage plants. Home lockers will make the use of frosted foods more convenient than ever before.

Advocates of deep-frozen foods long have maintained that the product is "fresher" than "fresh" foods because the former are taken at the peak of perfection—often within a few hours of the actual harvest—and kept that way through the quick-freezing process. Flavor consistency, color, vitamin content and nutritional value are maintained in frosted foods kept at sub-zero temperatures.

The new below-zero storage unit for the home in "streamlined" and consists of an upright cylinder, roughly the size of a barrel, with the compressor housed under a small hood at the side. It is given a white, refrigerator-type finish.

The well-known automotive engineer and inventor of "Deep-Freeze" has eliminated the customary vacuum in the refrigeration cycle by operating on back pressure. Thus power consumption is cut drastically, making sub-zero temperatures practicable and economical for the home.

SWEDISH DINING ROOM.

A dining room that borrows decorative touches from Sweden has ceiling and woodwork painted soft cobalt blue. The walls are done in pale gray on which floral motifs are painted at intervals. These designs are done in the peasant manner with red and blue predominating.

Game Room Decorations To Fit Family

Let 'Hobby' Decide How You Will Fix Up the 'Rec' Room.

Game room, "rec" room, rumphus department—it matters not a whit what you call it. The family will have its own name for the place before many cigarette ashes have been spilled, in any event. The main thing is that you have such a place as a part of the household.

There are so many decorative themes that lend themselves wholeheartedly to such a room that it resolves itself into a matter of sorting out the family's favorite pastimes until the most decorative one is determined upon. If, for instance, the household is "that way" about card playing, nothing could prove a happier background for their shuffling and score-keeping than a wall decoration of humorously sketched kings, queens and jacks.

Magie Lanterns Useful.
These can be applied to the wall as greatly enlarged playing cards—perhaps three by four and one-half feet in size. Most commercial artists have magic lanterns in their kit of tools with which they can greatly enlarge art subjects. In this way they can simply "throw" the reflections of the royal cardboard family on the wall and paint in their portraits—adding such grimaces and coy expressions as you desire.

What sort of surfaces should they be painted upon? Well, it's usually advisable to cover basement walls with wallboard and this takes paint excellently. The lightness or darkness of the background color of the wall should be determined by the amount of light that enters. Remember, when you make your selection, that dark colors soak up light as a sponge soaks up water. The crochets of the ceiling should also be covered with wallboard and it is well to coat this surface with a very light tint of the oil or water paint you are using so it will act as a light-reflecting surface.

Theme Songs.
There are really dozens of theme songs for the decoration of a rumphus room. If you've traveled a lot and are particularly fond of one of the countries you have visited, you might dedicate your room to the country and make a patio of old Spain—a room that suggests Algiers, Norway or Timbuktoo. Foreign travel posters on the wall can be usually effective and these can be protected and made washable with a coating of shellac.

If you and your family are keen on the subject of dancing, your recreation room might be made into a night club. A simple wall decoration for such a room—enlarged bars of music, taken from a song sheet, with musical notes hovering up and down the scales. If the room is to be in the basement and the cement floor is dry, it can be coated with a paint that is prepared especially for such surfaces and then waxed.

Place for Stage.
If your family has footlight fever and some of its members have dramatic aspirations, here is the place to build a small stage where they can play to the gallery to their heart's content. If you are a home movie fan, here is the place for your screen and projector.

Then, there are the nautical schemes that will allow you to call your fun room "The Fo'c's'le," the Northwest woods-log cabin idea, and the Rio Grande theme with its cacti, corals, Indian rugs and serapes. Your game room can

FHA Coverage Favored for All Home Building

Sentiment Gaining for Insurance Expansion, Says Nelson.

"Sentiment is increasing for expansion of FHA mortgage insurance to cover equitably all types of residential construction, both old and new," comments Herbert U. Nelson, executive vice president of the National Association of Real Estate Boards.

The very success and effectiveness of the FHA legislation is what makes its expansion so important. The current survey of the real estate market made by the National Association of Real Estate Boards reveals how very true this is. Asked to report the interest rate commonest in the community on new moderately priced houses, city after city gives a dual answer: FHA loans, 4 1-2 per cent; others, 5 1-2 per cent; or "FHA loans, 4 1-2 per cent; local loans, 6 per cent."

In real estate purchase and improvement this means a powerful thrust forward for those properties eligible to mortgage insurance, a drawback for those properties that cannot come under the wire.

Under the law as it now stands, we give a very definite financing advantage to new houses, and particularly to new houses of under $8,000 value. Indeed, after July 1, 1941, no mortgage is to be insured on single homes except those on property already under mortgage insurance or those insured before their construction was completed. Doubtless in the years just past we needed some such accent on new construction to start the wheels a-rolling. But new houses in the low-cost range under present conditions, are being built largely on the outskirts of cities—often outside of the city limits. So now we are finding that our FHA machinery, as at present geared, along with the good it is accomplishing, is doing something to our cities that we never intended. It is acting like a force pump to draw population out of the central residential sections, and is hastening their blight and decay, whereas if rightly applied this great feat should certainly be encouraging construction and repair in every section and should be aiding us to rebuild and renew every part of the city.

Congress is beginning to take an interest in this system, and FHA officials themselves are aware of it. It is expected that modification of the act will be sought to cure the situation.

One suggestion is that FHA mortgage insurance might safely be made available on an older house up to a much higher percentage of its value if the increase thus made possible in the loan were required to be spent on rehabilitation of the property.

be anything from an artist's studio to a rathskeller. It's all up to you. And, if Dad is willing, but his pocketbook it weak—there's your Uncle Sam in the background who has created the Federal Housing Administration to aid with the financing of just such home improvements.

Retail Chains Seek '100 Per Cent' Locations

Beginning of Important Cycle of Development, Say Observers.

"Retail business space in 100 per cent locations in cities of from 30,000 to 100,000 population is in demand for chain store leasing to a greater degree than ever before. And while the uncertainties arising from war conditions have temporarily slowed down their general leasing activity, the chains which occupy '100 per cent locations' in principal cities in every state (space whose rental, or rental value, is estimated at $436,500,000 per year) appear to be at the beginning of a cycle of important development. Expansion indicated, however, would be only what is in accord with demand that may be dictated by rise in purchasing power, local rise in population, or other opportunities. The trend to expansion is especially to be found among chains that before the depression had not reached their maximum of development."

Mark Levy, M. A. I., former chairman of the broker's division of the National Association of Real Estate Boards and for several years treasurer of the association, in a 64-page brochure, "Chain Stores," just published by the division.

In the booklet Mr. Levy, national authority on chain store leasing, gives packed and practical information on chain store location, including:

1. A table of the dimensions for a retail store regarded as ideal by various leading chains for their store units. So far as known, this is the first table of its kind to be published.
2. A list of the "100 per cent locations" in 205 leading cities of the United States, including both primary business centers and sub-centers. This list, the only compilation of its kind known to the author, is an extension and revision of a list by Mr. Levy published in the February, 1938, issue of the Journal of Real Estate Management.
3. A table of rentals which various types of retail stores can pay on percentages leases. The table represents "air averages" arrived at in a nation-wide survey made by Stanley Roe, secretary of the Mark Levy Realty Company.
4. How to present a location to a chain store.
5. Typical lease provisions for rental of business property on a percentage basis.
6. A bibliography on chain store leasing.
7. A method of classifying business centers.

"Parking facilities are becoming more and more an important element in chain store location," Mr. Levy says. "The type location the chain store demands is the best a trading area has to offer." There are cases where chain organizations pay up to three times as much rent as has been paid by an individual merchant. Such locations thus obtained are usually secured by long-term leases.

Can Chemurgy Give Us A New Building Material?

Could It Not Come From Waste Products of Forest and Farm? Herb Nelson, of NAREB, Tells of Interview With the Late Dr. Herty.

The goal of the whole home-building industry for recent years has been a truly low-cost house, one that could meet the great mass market indicated by the fact that three-fourths of our people have an income under $2,000 a year, writes Herbert U. Nelson, executive vice president, National Association of Real Estate Boards.

What we need, ideally, he says, is a type of house which would have the advantages of the present house and avoid its difficulties at half the present price. We have made progress, but the factors which keep home-building costs high have been found stubborn, indeed. Thirty years ago or so it was possible to build a good solid little brick house of four or five rooms with hot-air heat and the other facilities usual at the time, to cost, including the lot, $1,600. William Zelosky, of Chicago, tells me that he himself built them at that cost by the hundreds. And they are good today. To produce the same houses now would cost three times as much.

Labor costs, of course, are higher, but we would not want to bring building wages back to what they were even if we could. Building code requirements are a factor, and some of these are artificial, arbitrary and unreasonable. Collusive agreements within the building industry, particularly in the larger cities, are among the factors that have changed costs. But complex conditions such as these are hard to budge. It may in the end prove easier to get this same result of lower cost through technological developments. It is completely possible that we can produce a new house material that would revolutionize the building industry.

The ordinary house is built in eight or nine envelopes. First is the built the framework. Then, layer by layer, inside and out, is added sheathing, siding, insulation, and converted into plastics of various kinds. From such conversion we conceivably might evolve, cheaply, a material that would have strength, exclude moisture, furnish its own insulation and have a pleasant texture and appearance. Once you have such a material there is no reason why you cannot make a house by pouring a few large units that can be buttoned together very quickly in practically finished form.

The difficulty, Dr. Herty said, would be principally to find a way to cut down, sufficiently, the cost of sulphuric acid, which he said should be possible where use was to be made in such large quantities. The problem, he said, was a matter of technical investigation and of expanded use.

"I am going to work on it right away," he said, with contagious enthusiasm. But six months after we had had this conversation Dr. Herty died.

I am persuaded that what he talked about can be done. Already, with our conventional building materials, a Seattle builder, setting up business in an old street car barn, is finding it an advantage to construct small houses in two parts under this factory roof where he has controlled conditions, moving them ready-made on a truck to their intended position, where he bolts the two halves together.

For chemurgists who are looking for new uses for farm products, surely here is a promising field. Production following chemurgic research has so far been chiefly of small plastic gadgets. This, however interesting, offers only a replacement market. Material from which houses could be poured would mean a market cast indeed.

Old dead timber, stumps, branches, cornstalks and other "bagasse," by dissolving in sulphuric acid, can be synthesized lathing, plaster, two coats of it, and finally a decorative envelope or two of paint or paper. There are sometimes as many as 10 envelopes, made up of 30 or 40 kinds of material, each performing some essential service, one giving structural strength, another shutting off cold and heat, another furnishing a pleasant finished surface. Some 22 different skilled trades are utilized in the construction, each having a narrow field of its own, and each very jealous of that field.

If we could find a simple material, probably a plastic, that would incorporate the merits of many of these or all of them, we would at a stroke eliminate the need for all these separate envelopes and separate processes. And as we widened the number of families that could have a modern house we would be widening employment in the building field.

Some Facts on Domestic Water and House Heating

A high percentage of newly constructed homes in the lower income brackets now have finer hot water service than exists in innumerable residences of greater cost built some years ago and in need of modernization. For, the installation of modern water heating equipment has been encouraged in every community where better housing campaigns are progressing under the sponsorship of the Federal Housing Administration.

Today there are many fine contrivances for home heating and water heating, but none more popular than gas-fired furnaces and gas-fired water heaters.

Formerly, only the homes of persons with comfortable incomes were provided with the luxury of every household convenience, particularly true in the matter of adequate year-round hot water service. It is a widely recognized fact today that few if any improvements are as important to the American standard of living as an automatic gas water heater that will produce an abundance of crystal clear hot water of the proper temperature whenever and wherever it is needed.

How the Home Rivals the Car

Building of Each Compared, But the Two Have Little in Common.

In the ceaseless clamor for building costs low enough to bring new homes within reach of the masses—even families with $1,000 annual income—the automobile industry's production accomplishments are commonly cited as shining examples for the building industry to emulate.

The chief fault with this comparison is the scant analogy between automobiles and acceptable houses. Then, too, by inference it disregards the great strides made in residence construction.

In sizes, shapes and general characteristics, automobiles are intensively standardized, hence produce on assembly lines. They are readily deliverable even to remote places. The average car is used but a few hours each day, and for comparatively limited purposes. Some families of modest means maintain two autos—and neighbors wonder how they do it. Auto builders never have sought the revival of their industry through sale of new cars to families in the $1,000 income bracket.

On the other hand, a residence is used 24 hours a day—intensively for many purposes and incidentally for countless others. Sizes and styles vary widely, according to family needs and resources. Residences must be erected where they are to be used, because transporting houses of acceptable sizes is not feasible.

Wood, stone, brick and plaster—all used since antiquity—still constitute the bulk of most residences. However, their preparation and processing have been revolutionized, and powder-driven appliances speed their erection.

Private Capital Purchases Notes

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 20. Direct participation of private capital in public housing projects have reached more than $237,000,000. Short-term notes amounting to $31,137,000, offered by 10 local housing authorities, have been sold at net interest rates ranging from .456 of one per cent to .57 of 1 per cent, according to the United States Housing Authority.

Local authorities issuing the notes will now save the difference between these low rates and the rates of 2 3-4 to 3 1-4 per cent which they have been paying the USHA for loans to develop public housing projects.

ATLANTA CONSTITUTION Real Estate TRANSFERS - SALES - LEASES

Sec. C Sunday, July 21, 1940. Page 7

Lease, Sale, $44,350 for Moe Goldman

Cascade Baptist Church
Sells Beecher Street
Property.

Moe Goldman, vice president of J. H. Ewing & Sons, announces a sale and leases aggregating $44,350.

The Kroger Grocery and Baking Company, operators of Piggy-Wiggly Stores, have leased 376-78-80 Techwood drive, at the northwest corner of Alexander street, and will open a Piggy-Wiggly Super Market by the latter part of this month. The building is new, having just been built for the occupancy of the Kroger company.

The southeast corner of Beecher street and Westmont road was sold by Mr. Goldman to Realty Operations, Inc., from the Cascade Baptist church. The size of the property is 100 feet on Beecher street and 150 feet on Westmont road. The purchaser is now improving the property and a corner store of approximately 4,000 square feet, with a paved parking lot of approximately 5,000 square feet, has been leased to the Kroger Grocery and Baking Company, who will open another neighborhood Piggy-Wiggly Super Market when the building is completed about the first of September. The building will be most modern in design, with glass brick windows, and the entrance from the store to the parking lot. The store will be equipped with fixtures of streamline modern super store type.

28 Projects Open in July; Homes for 8,421 Families

In the last 12 months the USHA-aided program has reached its full stride. The scheduled opening this month of 28 projects from coast to coast and in Hawaii, bringing the total number of occupied projects to 59, marks the greatest advance since the opening of the first five projects in Jacksonville, Fla.; Buffalo, N. Y.; Austin, Texas, and New York city, on July 4, 1939.

From now on, with projects under construction in all parts of the country, families will be moving into USHA-aided homes in increasing numbers. The 28 projects opening this month will provide homes for 8,421 families when fully occupied. Added to the 13,657 dwellings in USHA-aided projects already opened, this will bring the number of dwellings for low-income families in projects opened for tenancy by the end of July to 22,078.

Projects to be opened this month vary in size from 786 units in the Clarksdale project in Louisville, Ky., to 54 units in the Park View Homes project in Athens, Ga.; 15 are for white tenancy, 13 for Negro.

Scattered as they are, from New York to Florida, and from Texas to the Hawaiian Islands, the 28 projects represent widely differing types of construction, building materials, and equipment. Predominant in the industrial sections of the north are three and four-story apartments constructed of brick and tile on reinforced concrete. Most of these projects are heated from a central plant. In the south and west, apartments give way to one and two-story row houses with brick, cinder block, or stucco exteriors. Where land is inexpensive, individual gardens are encouraged, and the percentage of building coverage is generally much smaller than in the highly congested metropolitan areas. Equipment varies according to climate and available utilities. In the extreme south, central heating is frequently not required.

75,000 Repay Debt to HOLC Of 177 Million

23,000 Freed Completely of Big Burden in Last 12 Months.

Nearly 75,000 home owners have repaid to the federal government—the Home Owners' Loan Corporation—$177,500,000, the amount of money the government advanced to them to save their homes from foreclosure during the dark days of real estate depression. In the last year, 23,000 were freed completely of a government debt of $57,000,000.

In the month of May, 2,141 house owners in various sections of the country cleared off the last of the loans made by the HOLC on their houses.

Charles A. Jones, general manager of the HOLC, reports that the increase in mortgage redemption has increased steadily since the first of the year. In January 1,598 home owners removed the last of the government mortgages, which is very significant, in the opinion of Mr. Jones, who intimated that it means national prosperity, gain in employment, a wave of financial salvation, which, if it continues, will lift a great many additional houses out of the sea of debt and back on a level of financial stability, good for the country as well as the individual.

"Considering that these borrowers were all heavily delinquent in both principal and interest and the great majority in arrears on taxes, their recovery proves both their good faith and the fact they only needed a helping hand such as the government provided," said Mr. Jones. "Lacking private credit, they were helpless until Congress created the HOLC to refinance their loans and give them a breathing spell. Now they have paid their own way out of the depression and they deserve credit for the job."

CASH SALE—This two-story brick, nine rooms, at 982 Oakdale road, N. E., in Druid Hills, was sold by Mrs. J. P. Pendergrast for $9,500 cash to W. S. Johns, through P. W. Woodward, of the Wall Realty Company, realtors.

HAS MOVED IN—No. 265 Pace's Ferry road, west, this nine-room home, three doors east of Habersham road, was sold last week by Mrs. Gladys W. Harris to William J. Hobbs. The lot is 100x300 feet. The new owner has already taken possession. The sale was made by W. Hoke Blair, of Adams-Cates Company, realtors.

More Property Is Acquired for Capitol Homes

200 More Dwelling Units Will Be Added to Project.

Acquisition of property in the recently announced extension of State Capitol Homes, south of the present construction, has begun. James H. Therrell, executive director of the Atlanta Housing Authority, announced yesterday.

The extension, covering an area of approximately seven acres, will make possible the construction of 200 additional dwelling units. Addition of the new area to the project was made possible by savings effected on the original Capitol project, and the cost of the combined development will come within the amount approved originally for the project by USHA, Therrell said.

State Capitol Homes, located along Hunter street, Memorial drive and Woodward avenue just east of the Capitol building, will house low-income white families.

Shallow Closets Best in Bathroom

Frequently a space is available in a bathroom to build in shelves for a large medicine cabinet. But don't make the mistake of building them deep, for where bottles and jars of various shapes and sizes are placed one behind another in several rows it is always the one in back that is wanted, and then there is first the difficulty of finding it and next the trouble of getting it out without upsetting several others.

Shallow shelves with the distance between graduated to accommodate different height bottles are most useful and convenient.

Fact-Finders Cite Dangers To Democracy

Georgia Gives Only Lip-Service To Ideals, Analysis Says.

An analysis of Georgia's political conditions, almost epochal in its plain-speaking, was made public here yesterday by the Citizens' Fact Finding Movement of Georgia, representing civic organizations with a membership of 250,000 persons.

The report was prepared by a committee headed by Judge Orville Park, of Macon, and will be widely disseminated by the movement's headquarters.

"When, as now, our political system creaks and cracks under the strain which the needs and desires of our people put upon it," the report declared, "its orderly repair becomes an end in itself to safeguard democracy."

"Democracy," the report insisted, "is threatened today not so much from without as from within by our own people—by those who distrust, deny, or betray it."

"In Georgia we have inherited the traditions and preserved the forms of democracy, we give lip service to its ideals, but in actual practice we have lost sight of the meaning of the democratic process. We have surrounded it with restrictions and outworn machinery, and we have permitted cliques and demagogues to manipulate this machinery toward ends that challenge the spirit of our institutions."

Individual Dignity.

"Democracy asserts first of all the worth and dignity of the individual human being, the value of his vote. Any citizen who believes that his vote is worthless or wasted is a threat to democracy. Any law or system which offers any real basis for that belief is an even greater threat. We have such laws and systems in Georgia."

"And still more threatening is any act which flouts public opinion as expressed at the ballot-box, or arrogates to any individual or group outside the law the functions of prosecutor, judge and executioner—and of such acts we have had too many of late."

The report asserted that Georgia suffers more than most American states from class antagonism. "Economic and political democracy are of one piece," it pointed out. "Until material goods are more widely distributed in Georgia, some of us will continue to be dangerously afflicted with the notion that the wealthy or privileged are unworthy of political leadership."

"As a result, some of the economically privileged seem to distrust democracy, abdicate even their right to offer leadership through fear of political humiliation, and seek political power by irresponsible maneuvers behind the scenes."

"Social Distances" Cited. "The social distance between the well-to-do and the masses has created barriers in thinking, which tend to make it impossible for anyone to represent the best interests of both, as a representative of a democracy should."

"The privileged have the opportunity to remove these barriers by recognizing their own interests in the problems that confront the masses. In few other states is there such a cleavage between social and economic leadership on the one hand and political leadership on the other. Leadership should be open to all of our people solely in accordance with their capacity for truly representative government."

Discussing the necessity for change, the report observed:

"We must recognize that change is characteristic of democracy. It is an unstable equilibrium. Its structural strength comes from the fact that it is sustained by opposing forces. Its rhythm comes from its capacity to move quickly from unrest to calm, and back to unrest."

"Stable uniformity can only be attained under a permanent structure which allows for no change from within. Of many a Georgia citizen it can be said . . . that if he had been present at creation he would have cried that chaos was being destroyed."

"When ever we resist changes merely because it is change, we are impairing the foundation of democracy."

Minority Rights Upheld.

The necessity to safeguard the rights of minorities was emphasized in these words:

"In a democratic government the right of decision belongs to the majority, but the right of just representation belongs to all. The moment that any group or party lends itself to the destruction or oppression of minority groups, it lays the foundation for its own destruction."

Terming positive action as necessary to safeguard democracy, the document quoted Judge Florence Allen, of the United States circuit court of appeals, as declaring:

"Eternal vigilance is difficult; it makes demands on our finest but our most reluctant characteristics. Liberty and democracy and honor do not come to us ready-made. A man does not secure his education by deputy, nor delegate another to eat for him, and his relation to democracy is just as personal as his relation to food and education."

In an eloquent conclusion the report said: "All of us would fight and die to keep democracy, but the truer patriot is he who sweats to make it work so well that it cannot be threatened. This is the business of every citizen."

LEAGUE PUBLICATION URGES REFORMS

A spirited exhortation in behalf of democracy features the first page of the current issue of "Facts," official organ of the Atlanta League of Women Voters, urging reforms of local government.

"Democracy, to make it work, begins at home," is the content of the headlines. The article, arranged in striking box, reads:

"Today the biggest question facing the world is whether democracy can make itself efficient enough to survive."

"The League of Women Voters believes it can. We, as patriotic citizens of the United States of America, can do our country no greater service than to put our local house in order, streamline our governments so that they can perform the functions that the citizens now demand and expect of them."

The article introduces a comprehensive discussion of means to co-ordinate city and county governmental functions, a merit system for Atlanta police, adequate relief for unemployed and destitute persons, a secret ballot, co-education in the high schools and other reforms advocated by the league.

Washington Stewardess Visits Her Mother Here

Mrs. Olga Cook, formerly Olga Petty, of Atlanta, who is stewardess on the United States liner Washington, which was threatened by a submarine off the coast of Portugal in June, is here for a visit on account of the illness of her mother.

Mrs. Cook was among the 1,020 Americans who for 30 minutes prepared to leave the ship in lifeboats after the submarine threatened to torpedo the Washington. The submarine commander finally ordered the Washington to proceed, stating that it had been mistaken for another ship.

Palms and white gladioli formed the setting yesterday afternoon at 5 o'clock for the marriage of Miss Mildred Nell Rampey, lovely daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Lawton Robert Rampey and Joseph Walter Rimmer Jr., son of Mrs. Joseph Walter Rimmer. The ceremony was performed by Dr. Ellis A. Fuller in the presence of the immediate families and a few close friends of the couple.

An informal reception was given by Mrs. Charles Rampey, the bride's cousin, at her home on Iverson street. The bride's table was overlaid with a beautiful lace cloth and centered with a tiered wedding cake. Silver candelabra holding white tapers were placed at artistic intervals. ## Miss Georgia Rudolph Weds Mr. Wall Jr. in Gainesville GAINESVILLE, Ga., July 20.—Miss Georgia Perry Rudolph, lovely daughter of Mrs. John Boyd Rudolph and the late Dr. Rudolph, of Gainesville, became the bride of James Edgar Wall Jr., of this city, formerly of Tampa, Fla., at impressive rites solemnized at the First Methodist church at 8 o'clock this evening. Dr. L. Wilkie Collins officiated in the presence of an assemblage of friends and relatives.

Candles were lighted by Jack Wall Evans, of Tampa, and Edgar B. Dunlap Jr., of this city.

Wedding music was presented by Mrs. James W. Merritt, mezzo soprano; Mrs. John Woodcock, violinist, and Mrs. Emil B. Michaelis, organist.

Mrs. Charles Hardy, cousin of the bride, as maid of honor, was gowned in pale pink mouseline fashioned with drop shoulders and a short train. The neckline was edged with handmade flowers centered with seed pearls. She carried a bouquet of pink roses and snapdragons, tied with blue.

Bridesmaids were Miss Irpe Rudolph, also a cousin of the bride, and Mrs. J. Clark Evans, of Tampa, sister of the groom, who wore gowns like that of the maid of honor. Their flowers were cascade bouquets of pastel garden flowers tied with blue. Miss Felicia Jackson as junior bridesmaid, was gowned like the bridesmaids, and carried a smaller bouquet of the same design.

She later took graduate courses at George Washington University and the University of California. The groom-to-be is the only son of Mrs. William Thomas Bacon, of Bonar Hall, Madison, Ga., and the late Edward Taylor Newton. His sister is Miss Theresa Newton, of Madison. Descended

Notes of Georgia U. D. C.

The names of the winners in the historical essay contest, sponsored annually by the Georgia Division, United Daughters of the Confederacy, are announced by the members of the contest committee, of which Mrs. James E. Crouse, of Macon, is chairman.

Gloria McAfee, of Macon, 11-year-old member of the sixth grade of Winship school, is the grammar school winner, honorable mention being given Suzanne Merk, of Athens, 11-year-old member of the sixth grade of Chase Street school. The high school winner is Sue Dixon, of Pelham, member of the eleventh grade of the Pelham High school, honorable mention being given Rebecca Faust, of Crawford, member of the tenth grade of the Crawford High school.

The winners of the contest were awarded beautiful gold medals, which are in the shape of the Maltese Cross and have the U. D. C. insignia in the center with the words "Georgia Division" engraved above and below the insignia.

The essay contest is sponsored each year by the Georgia division, U. D. C., of which Mrs. Charles T. Tillman, Quitman, is president, and conducted with the co-operation of the school teachers. Essays are written by pupils from the fifth grade through high school and are graded upon historic value, style and neatness. The purpose of the contest is to stimulate interest and encourage among young people the study of Southern history and Southern heroes. This year for the first time, the name of a woman was chosen as the subject for the essays, that of the late Miss Mildred Lewis Rutherford.

The pamphlets from which material was taken were distributed to the schools of the state in February and were prepared by the essay committee, Mrs. James E. Crouse, Macon; Mrs. Frank F. Jones, Lowther Hall, Clinton; and the late Mrs. Walter J. Grace, Macon. Mrs. Grace compiled the biographical sketch of Miss Rutherford and Mrs. Jones compiled the list of books and pamphlets of which Miss Rutherford was author.

In conducting the contest the state was divided into five districts with a chairman for each district. They were: Miss Kathleen Mitchell, Atlanta; Mrs. Ben I. Thornton, Tallulah Falls; Mrs. Perry C. Clegg, Cordele; Miss Wilma Orr, Fort Valley; Mrs. Albert Tidwell, Quitman. Each district chairman appointed a committee of judges who selected the best essay from grammar schools and the best from high schools and sent these to the state committee, who in turn had them judged. Each essay was signed with a fictitious name, with the real name enclosed in a sealed envelope.

The essay committee feels that the contest fulfilled the purpose for which it was planned.

Mrs. Frank F. Jones, division historian, announces that special attention is called to the remainder of the year's programs as outlined by the U. D. C. historian general, Mrs. William Cabell Flournoy, of Lexington, Va., in her year book issued last December.

local cities, 1861-65, may be added.

Those chapters finding it more expedient to compile their year-books during the summer months are asked to follow the historian general's outline as given above, and leave space each following month for the new programs to be issued next December.

Members of Young Married Set Succumb To Fever Known as 'Blue Print-itis'

By Sally Forth.

• • • IT ISN'T "the house that Jack built," but the ones now being constructed by a number of young Atlanta couples, that are attracting society's eyes and thoughts these days. Few gatherings are minus some one of these home builders, with the result that conversation revolves around blueprints, color schemes and general interior decoration. It's definitely exciting, this business of building a house, and practically all of the ones which Sally has in mind will be ready for occupancy by the time official moving day—September 1—rolls around, and one or two will be completed by the first of August.

Ed and Laura Maddox Smith have selected the stately type of Georgian architecture for the handsome two-story brick house they are building on Woodhaven road. When completed, the house will be painted white, with green blinds as a trimming. There will be a porch on one side, balanced by a wing on the other. They have purchased a number of pieces of handsome colonial furniture in order that the interior may carry out the classic feeling of the exterior design.

Phil Jr. and Elkin Goddard Altman are another young couple who are in the throes of construction. Pace's Ferry road is the location and the attractive house is a rambling bungalow. Since the house is still in its early stages, these two have yet to decide what color it is to be painted—white, gray, etc. Elkin is now as busy as two hoes selecting furniture, rugs and draperies.

Tommie and Flossie Hill Gerding's new home on Dellwood drive, just off Collier road, is almost completed. Of a particularly charming design, it is painted white and is offset with green blinds. When Sally talked with Flossie, the latter had just returned from selecting the paint for the interior, and you may rest assured that, with this smart young matron's faultless taste displayed, her decorative scheme will have plenty of eye-appeal.

Flossie and Tommie will have their close friends, Jack and Joyce Smith Boykin, for next-door neighbors. The latter are also building a house which they expect to occupy by the first of August. Most attractive is this house of white clapboard with its dark green blinds.

This same street has also been chosen for their new abode by Frank Jr. and Robyn Peoples Walsh. They aren't building, however, for they found exactly the kind of house they wanted already constructed! This one, too, is white with green blinds, a type that seems to suit Atlanta's pines, oaks and dogwood, as though it were as native as the trees themselves. Robyn, of course, is having an exciting time buying the draperies and furniture that will give personality to her new home.

A Georgian house of old red brick, with two wings, is now being built by Jim and Rebecca Young Frazer on West Wesley road and will be ready for their occupancy by September 1. Rebecca has bought an exquisite antique breakfast table that she has been eyeing enviously for four years while it stood in an antique shop! Needless to say, this piece will be the focal point in her spacious new living room.

Henry and Lila Reed Voigt Young are an exceptionally lucky young couple. The new home they are building in Griffin is the gift of the former's parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. Reed Voigt, of Chattanooga, Tenn. Architecturally, the house is Georgian and is constructed of brick, painted white, with green blinds. The couple expects to move into the house sometime between the middle of September and the first of October. They will, however, come to Atlanta the first of September to stay with Henry's parents, the H. Lane Youngs, until the house is completed.

That attractive colonial bungalow with the white columns that you have seen in the process of construction out Peachtree road belongs to Fred and Jean Lucas Story. Fashioned of white clapboard, the house will have green blinds for its trimming. The house and lot, incidentally, are right next door to that of Jean's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Lucas.

Another popular young couple, Julian and Anne Coppedge Carr, are also building a new home on a beautiful site on Rivers road. Two lovely features of this two-story Georgian residence are the bay windows in the living and dining rooms that will overlook the terrace, and gardens which Anne intends to have in shape as soon as possible after the completion of the house. The house, by the way, is brick and will be painted white, with green blinds framing the windows.

If you don't happen to be a homeowner, you'll probably have definite longings after reading this, but don't blame Sally if you should suddenly find yourself succumbing to that delightful fever known as blueprint-itis!

• • • A GIRL'S first formal dance is always a date to remember, but in the case of Sue Plerson it bears double significance. When she went to her first Pi Pi formal dance (the sorority which she served as president last year at Washington Seminary), she met Donald Roger Eastman Jr., and today their engagement is announced in other columns of the paper.

At the time neither expected that Fate had played an ace card in the game of love, but it marked the beginning of their romance. Sue and Donald saw one another on two occasions after the Pi Pi dance, at affairs given for the younger set. Their first date came several weeks later, when Donald invited Sue to a Chi Phi spend-the-day party.

From that date on the couple was paired for parties and dances, and their intimate friendship was engaged. Sue received her ring two weeks ago and plans are under way for her wedding to take place in September at St. Philip's cathedral. The choice of the beautiful Episcopal cathedral for the nuptials is most appropriate, for soon after Sue and Donald became interested in each other, they chose the cathedral to worship and have been constant and regular members of the congregation.

• • • LOVELY Muriel Smith, of LaGrange, wears a gorgeous diamond ring to seal her betrothal to Atlanta's John Farmer, which is announced in these columns today. The center stone, which weighs two carats, was a gift from John's father, the late John Kyle Farmer, to his mother on the occasion of the birth of John's second sister, Jeanette. And Mrs. Farmer presented it to her second son when he became engaged to the popular LaGrange belle.

Muriel has inherited some beautiful heirloom silver which will grace the dinner table in her new home after she becomes Mrs. Farmer. The silver is half of a set of 13 dozen pieces, in the exquisite Buckingham pattern, which formerly belonged to her paternal grandfather, the late Gershon Smith, of New York city. Mr. Smith received the silver as a gift from the Pennsylvania Steel Company upon the occasion of his retirement from a position of respectability with the company.

• • • AN UNUSUALLY beautiful diamond, surrounded by a cluster of smaller diamonds in a square setting, symbolizes the engagement of Marie Forrester and Dr. Deneen McCormack, which is announced in today's society's section.

The bride-elect has chosen her close friend, Medora Fitten, for her maid of honor, and Sally was interested to learn that the pair have the same initials, the same middle name (Duncan) and the same birthday! The birthdays fall on September 7, and that is the date chosen by Marie and Deneen for their marriage! The wedding will be one of the first to feature fall hues, and the attractive bride will marry in traditional white.

Miss Ruby Pope Weds Mr. Wardlaw

The marriage of Miss Ruby Alene Pope to Alfred Dupree Wardlaw was quietly solemnized Friday at 8:30 o'clock at the pastorial of the Kirkwood Baptist church. Dr. K. Owen White officiated in the presence of only the immediate families of the bride and groom.

The bride was becomingly attired in a white crepe model with matching accessories and a corsage of gardenias. Her only attendant was her sister, Miss Tommie Pope, who wore blue sheer with blue accessories and a shoulder spray of pink roses. O. C. Self, a lifelong friend of the groom, was best man.

Mrs. Wardlaw is the daughter of Mrs. T. A. Pope and the late Mr. Pope. Her sisters are Misses Christine and Tommie Pope.

Mr. Wardlaw is the only son of Mrs. C. R. Wardlaw and the late Mr. Wardlaw and his sister is Miss Nettie Sue Wardlaw. He is connected with the Curtis Publishing Company of this city.

Immediately after the ceremony, Mr. Wardlaw and his bride departed for a wedding trip, the destination of which was not revealed. Upon their return they will reside at 605 Mayland circle, S. W.

Dr. and Mrs. Herman L. Turner have returned from Jackson, Tenn., where they visited the daughter and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Earle Bryant. They also visited in Pine Bluff, Ark.

MISS MARGARET LINTON SMITH.

Miss Margaret Linton Smith To Wed George N. Wagnon

Focusing the interest of Atlanta society is the announcement made today by Dr. and Mrs. Linton Smith of the betrothal of their lovely young daughter, Miss Margaret Linton Smith, to George Noble Wagnon, of Atlanta. The marriage of the popular young couple will unite families who have long been prominent in the annals of the city.

One of the most beautiful members of the younger set, Miss Smith is the eldest daughter of her parents. Her mother is the former Miss Edith Loraine Farlinger, daughter of Mrs. A. W. Farlinger and the late Mr. Farlinger. Her paternal grandparents were the late Dr. and Mrs. Henry Marshall Smith. Her sisters are Misses Loraine and Susan Smith. The bride-elect graduated from Girls' High school, where she was an active member of Sunev sorority. She is now studying at Agnes Scott College.

Mr. Wagnon is the son of the late Dr. and Mrs. Bertram H. Wagnon. His mother was before her marriage Miss Mary Mildred Noble, daughter of the late Dr. and Mrs. George Henry Noble, prominent Atlanta citizens. His paternal grandparents were Mr. and Mrs. Millard Wagnon, of Milledgeville, and his sister is Miss Mildred Lucy Wagnon.

The groom-elect graduated from the Sewanee Military Academy and received his B. A. degree from the University of the South at Sewanee, Tenn. He is studying medicine at the Emory School of Medicine. He is a member of the Sigma Nu social fraternity and Theta Kappa Psi medical fraternity.

McDonald-Sledd Rites Set For Wednesday in Brunswick

BRUNSWICK, Ga., July 20.—Announcement is made today of the wedding plans of Miss Mary Eloise McDonald, of Decatur, formerly of Brunswick, and Marvin Banks Sledd, of Lynn, Mass., formerly of Decatur. The marriage will be solemnized Wednesday afternoon at 5:30 o'clock at the First Presbyterian church in this city. The Rev. J. W. McQueen, pastor, will officiate in the presence of relatives and close friends of the prominent young couple. Mrs. A. V. Woods, organist, will furnish the nuptial music.

The bride-elect will be given in marriage by her father, D. McDonald Fraser, of Brunswick, and will be attended by her younger sister, Miss Louisa Fraser, as maid of honor. Little Forrest Eloise McDonald, of Savannah, niece and namesake of the bride-elect, will be flower girl.

The bridegroom-elect will be attended by his brother, Warren Candler Sledd, of Decatur, as best man, and the ushers will be Leighton McDonald, of Savannah, and Powell Fraser, of this city, brothers of the bride-elect; Bill McDonald and Dan McDonald, both of Brunswick.

Following the church ceremony, Mr. and Mrs. McDonald Fraser, parents of the bride-elect, will entertain at a small wedding reception at the Oglethorpe hotel.

Adorable little Elizabeth L'Engle Tufts starts her day off at the early morning hour of 7 o'clock with the aid of her charming young mother, Mrs. Arthur Tufts Jr. The first step in the daily routine of two-month-old baby Elizabeth is the partaking of orange juice and cod liver oil. Then comes the bath, which this future belle doesn't seem to mind a bit, even with a strange photographer looking on! Following the bath, the youngster is dressed again by her mother. The daily weight must be checked next and the look of smug satisfaction on baby Elizabeth's face is caused by freedom from worry over calories and a resulting lack of dread of the scales! Last, but certainly not least, in the daily schedule are dinner and the sandman, who never fails to receive an eager welcome from Elizabeth, who is a model in well-bred behavior in infant circles. Elizabeth, who is named for her popular mother, is the adored granddaughter of Mr. and Mrs. Philip Fatio L'Engle and Mrs. Arthur Tufts Sr.

Georgia Department American Legion Auxiliary

Mrs. L. M. Dewell, Atlanta, Editor.

A message from Mrs. E. R. Harris, of Windsor, second vice president and membership chairman of the Georgia department, American Legion Auxiliary, says:

"The American Legion Auxiliary is a unique organization. Only through the American Legion can admittance be gained. No proclamation of President, or edict of King or Dictator, can command admission; no act of congress or parliament secures recognition; the wealthy woman cannot purchase the position; its doors open only through the presentation to the Legion of a bit of paper, war-torn, and perhaps soiled, which testifies to the honorable discharge from the army, navy or marine corps of the United States during the World War.

"A membership in the Auxiliary is a boundless privilege. The field of activity is so extensive that all women who are eligible can find that which interests them. Rehabilitation and child welfare appeal to all women who want to do something useful; national defense, legislation, Americanism offer splendid opportunities to those who enjoy a study of the nation's affairs; community service is particularly adaptable to those who take a keen interest in civic improvements and home culture. The desire to bring life, hope and love to those who are less fortunate than we are has made the American Legion Auxiliary—that great number of wives, mothers, daughters, widows and sisters of the men who served in the World War—the greatest women's humanitarian organization in the world.

"The star of blue was the emblem of service during the war. Today the Auxiliary continues to use the blue star to exemplify service—set in a spotless white field of Americanism—as a badge of distinction and honor which each Auxiliary member is privileged to wear.

"Legislation, rehabilitation, radio, publicity, poppy, national defense, Americanism, child welfare, community service, junior activities, and veterans' employment represent the departments of our American Legion Auxiliary, but the heart and soul is membership. We need the great number of women who are eligible to join our ranks but are still on the outside, to add strength to strength. They need the Auxiliary to satisfy their desire for interest outside the home. To all the women of Georgia, worthy of being chosen, we offer membership in the American Legion Auxiliary."

Mrs. Clifford Russell, of Rome, chairman of emblems, trophies and awards states she still has the Junior Helen Kenan Young trophy, not awarded at the Augusta convention. She asks that all 1939-40 presidents from Junior units send her a copy of their reports in order that the trophy may be sent to the organized Junior unit entitled to it. This trophy was won last year by the College Park Junior Auxiliary.

Patients at the Augusta hospital enjoyed a picnic at Julian Smith park recently. Mrs. T. D. Murphy, hospital director, and Miss Nell Harper, recreation aide, assisted by ladies of the Louis L. Battey and Richmond Auxiliaries, of Augusta, entertained 200 patients. Games were played until 4 o'clock, when Mrs. Hilton's orchestra furnished music for the dance which followed.

Many posts and units have been busy the past week installing their new 1940-41 officers. On Monday the Waldo M. Slaton unit, of Buckhead, held their installation at the Colonial Terrace hotel, with Mrs. D. N. Stevens, fifth district director, installing the following: President, Mrs. S. E. Dellinger; first vice president, Mrs. Ernest Allen; second vice president, Mrs. E. N. Schilling; secretary, Mrs. O. T. Fishback; treasurer, Mrs. Belle Gresham; historian, Mrs. Murt Kelly; chaplain, Mrs. J. B. Weldon, and sergeant at arms, Mrs. Guy Crawford. The retiring president, Mrs. H. E. Sanford Jr., was presented with two naval print plates in recognition of her splendid services for the past two years as president. A committee was appointed to purchase a community service cup to be given to the Department of Georgia as replacement for the one which was won for three consecutive years and which now becomes the permanent possession of the Waldo M. Slaton unit. A social hour was enjoyed with the post.

Mrs. A. L. Henson installed the following officers of the Lyle-Brewster unit, College Park, Thursday evening: President, Mrs. H. C. Stakely; first vice president, Mrs. J. C. Hambright; second vice president, Mrs. Roy Stone; secretary, Mrs. Joe Morris; treasurer, Mrs. George W. Harris; historian, Mrs. Sam Rucker; chaplain, Mrs.

H. C. Hutcheson, and sergeant at arms, Mrs. Jennie Mae Moore. This was a joint installation, the officers for the post being installed by State Commander-elect Hoyt Wimpey, of Thomasville. Mrs. R. G. Vinson, of Thomasville, newly-elected state president of the Auxiliary, was present and brought an inspiring message. The retiring unit president, Mrs. Jennie Mae Moore, was presented with a past president's pendant. A social hour and refreshments were enjoyed. Music was furnished by the guitar club. The music and rehabilitation cups, won at the Augusta convention, were on display.

New officers for the Atlanta Unit No. 1 were installed Friday evening in their Legion home by Mrs. A. L. Henson, as follows: President, Mrs. Mercer Harbin; first vice president, Mrs. C. T. Hovis; second vice president, Mrs. J. N. Elliott; secretary, Mrs. Barney Parrott; treasurer, Mrs. L. H. Straube; historian, Mrs. G. E. Parks; chaplain, Mrs. Robert Giles; sergeant at arms, Mrs. S. J. McCarty; parliamentarian, Mrs. A.

H. Strickland, and auditor, Mrs. Arthur Hazard.

Mrs. W. E. Patterson, chairman of junior activities for Harold Byrd unit, Decatur, reports an enthusiastic meeting of the juniors in July, with a count of 16 members. Officers were elected as follows: President, Dorothy Wallace; first vice president, Marjorie Brown; secretary, Eleanor Whiteford; treasurer, Jean Denning; sergeant at arms, Martha Feemster; historian, Lena Maxey, and chaplain, Jean Brown.

Mrs. Paul J. McGovern, Americanism chairman for Harold Byrd unit, was the speaker at their July meeting. After the meeting the Auxiliary joined the men in the courthouse for the installation of the post's officers by State Commander Hoyt Brown. Mrs. Vernon Frank, unit president, was introduced by Post Commander Leon Hollingworth, after the installation, and she in turn introduced her officers as follows: First vice president, Mrs. E. J. Helble; second vice president, Mrs. L. M. Barker; recording secretary, Mrs. R. E. Bulloch; corresponding secretary, Mrs. A. E. Lane; treasurer, Mrs. Charles Cudd; historian, Mrs.

H. D. Gaines; chaplain, Mrs. J. R. Keeler; sergeant at arms, Mrs. H. R. Maxey. The general excellence trophy and Cash Hammond publicity cup, awarded at the Augusta convention, were given a place of honor.

Summer Hour Show Features Rain, Aladdin's Lamp Themes

Kodaly Suite To Be Presented by Columbia Symphony.

A program of melody and gaiety, following patterns suggested by rain and Aladdin's lamp has been prepared for the distinctive Summer Hour program during its broadcast to be heard over WGST at 8 o'clock tonight.

Jessica Dragonette, soprano star; James Newell, baritone, and Leith Stevens, conducting the orchestra and chorus, will join in a cheerful musical review of songs and experiences in the rain category. Budd Hulick will give another of his amusing fairy tales with specially prepared musical background.

Compositions by two leading contributors to contemporary music have been chosen by Howard Barlow as features of his Columbia Broadcasting Symphony concert over WGST at 2 o'clock this afternoon. William Fineshriber is intermission commentator.

First of these is the late Charles Martin Loeffler's "Pagan Poem," one of the Alsatian-American's best known scores. The other is the suite, "Hary Janos," by the eminent Hungarian Zoltan Kodaly. Layton Bailey, a Texas boy who quit selling automobiles a couple of years ago to take up a career as a band leader, will lead his orchestra aboard the Bandwagon during its broadcast to be heard over WSB at 6:30 o'clock tonight. The featured vocalist in Bailey's orchestra is Jean Janis, a former Atlanta girl who is known here as Ernestine Jones.

Ellery Queen, hoping to escape to the country for a restful weekend, runs into a jewel thief in "The Adventure of the Treasure Hunt," over WGST at 6:30 o'clock tonight.

Ellery and his crime sleuths, Sergeant Velle, Inspector Queen, and Nikki, are among the house guests at General Barrett's military estate on the Hudson to celebrate the former chief's birthday. No sooner has the group arrived than the famous Barrett pendant is stolen from the general's daughter. Ellery, keeping in tune with the weekend party, cleverly stages a treasure hunt for the guests in the hope of tracking down the criminal.

Brewster Morgan and Nat Curtis will present an athletics-odyssey, titled "The Canvas Kiss," during the Columbia Workshop program over WGST at 7 o'clock tonight.

The "Canvas Kiss" is the touching story of Willy—a con-crushing Kangaroo who could have taken on Joe Louis, Jack Dempsey, Jim Jeffries, Jess Willard and the whole left field bleachers gang at Ebbets field—all at once.

Although the country at large knows that the electric eye is a little device that opens and closes doors, turns on lighting fountains and performs other interesting tasks, few people realize how important it has become to their daily living and well-being. On the "Hour of Charm" program over WSB at 9 o'clock tonight, Rush Hughes will tell the story of how a group of electrical wizards perfected the photo-electric tubes to perform even greater tasks than anybody could possibly realize.

The musical portion of the program is built about the romance of flowers—and Phil Spitalny's all-girl orchestra will play tunes which set the mood.

The programs include:
2:00—Columbia Broadcasting Symphony, WGST.
Overture to "The Merry Wives of Windsor," by Nicolai.
Pagan Poem, by Loeffler.
Symphony No. 8, in B minor, "Unfinished," by Schubert.
Suite, "Hary Janos," by Kodaly.

8:00—Summer Hour, WGST.
"Outside of That I Love You" (Orchestra, Chorus), by Berlin.
"Love's Old Sweet Song" (Miss Dragonette), by Malloy.
"Hara Hara" (Orchestra), by Dini-Curley.
"Torna Sorrento" (Mr. Newell), by Di Curtis.
"How High the Moon" (Orchestra), by Hamilton.

South Keeps Open House For Waterfowl

47 Refuges Established in 10 States by Government.

Service is cafeteria style but the table's always set and it's meals-at-all-hours on "water farms" where Uncle Sam offers southern hospitality to winter-visiting waterfowl.

The "farms" are scattered over the territory in wildlife refuges to assure plenty of tempting tidbits for the millions of mallards, baldpates, pintails, and other waterfowl that will start flapping down from Canada, come October, for a five-month visit.

Many of these "water farms" are being built with dredges, dikes and dams in areas long since abandoned by formal agriculture.

Fields Reclaimed.
Rice fields of the South Carolina low country, unused for more than half a century, are being reclaimed to grow wild celery, millet, and wild rice. Dry Louisiana swampland is being leveled to regain swampy feeding grounds for the lesser snow geese and their fellows.

James Silver, director of the new 10-state southeastern region of the recently formed fish and wildlife service, said several score "water farming" units have been constructed with WPA and CCC aid. The construction work, which has been going on for five years, is near the mid-way point.

Actually the "farms" are artificial ponds with ditches and gates arranged to provide water level control so that ideal conditions may be obtained for the desired aquatic vegetation. Some are huge, like the 30,000-acre pool on the Sabine Refuge in Louisiana.

Plant Food Crops.
In some cases crops have to be sown the first year. After that they keep growing if the water is kept at the proper level, generally one to two feet deep.

Some wild ducks, the shallow feeders, like to rest on the water, dip their heads and snap off their dinner from the root. These ducks benefit from the "farms."

The diving duck group will plunge 10 feet and more for feed.

47 in Operation.
The government owns 47 refuges comprising 1,218,883 acres in the southeast. Twenty-nine are under regular supervision and the others are mostly island rookeries off the gulf and Atlantic coasts. Many of the islands have large numbers of the spectacular heron, egret, spoonbill and tern, beautiful birds that a quarter of a century ago were relentlessly hunted for plumage.

States in the new region are Alabama, Arkansas, Georgia, Florida, Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina and Tennessee.

The region was formed July 1 in a government reorganization which united the Bureau of Biological Survey and the Bureau of Fisheries and combined two southern biological survey regions.

Business Club Juvenile Work Is Recognized

National Organization Gives Atlanta Chapter Silver Cup.

Atlanta chapter of the American Business Club was awarded a silver cup in recognition of its juvenile work at the meeting of the executive committee of the national organization in Danville, Ill., last week.

David Price, president of the Atlanta chapter and member of the committee, received the award.

The juvenile work of the chapter, which was chartered in 1936, last year consisted of 21 projects. The most outstanding work by the chapter is the guidance of 10 boys turned over to members by the juvenile court. These members act as counselors as well as probation officers for the boys and have assumed responsibility of them until they reach 21.

Baseball uniforms for the Atlanta Boys' Club team and new machinery for the club's shop were furnished by the chapter last year. The Boys' Club, through efforts of the business chapter, is now used as headquarters for an employment service for boys who need financial help to continue school. This project has been worked out through co-operation of the board of education, which furnishes names of boys worthy of the aid.

Other officers of the club are Charles Phillips III, vice president; Ernest Moore, treasurer; and Robert Kimbrough, secretary. The board of directors include J. Kennedy Martin, Thomas McDonald, Clarence Subbline and Sam Hubbard.

The attendance cup of the American Business Club was also won by the Atlanta chapter for the past year's record, as was second place for the efficiency cup.

High Museum Given Woodcut By Rockefeller

Art Work by Cole To Be Hung in Auditorium Lobby.

A valuable addition to the permanent collection of art treasures at the High Museum of Art is a woodcut by Timothy Cole, recently presented by John D. Rockefeller Jr.

The woodcut is made from the

Timothy Cole was born in London. He moved to this country at the age of seven and became one of the world's most important figures in the art of wood engraving. One of the last of the great engravers in the American group, he died in 1935.

Wood engraving was the predecessor of photography and the fine example of the art by Cole will be hung in the auditorium lobby of the High Museum.

Three Counties Are Alarmed By Mad Foxes

Spread of Rabies Fears; Old Georgia Sport Is Threatened.

Rabid foxes in Burke, Jefferson and Jenkins counties have caused widespread alarm among followers of the midnight chase all over Georgia.

Following reports of foxes attacking persons and livestock in this section hunters fear the spread of rabies into all parts of the state. This is one of the chief outdoor problems of the moment, according to the division of wildlife, inasmuch as it threatens one of Georgia's oldest and popular outdoor sports. It has no precedent in American wildlife annals, observers say.

Federal, state and Rockefeller Foundation agencies have launched investigation of the epidemic, which has claimed the lives of many foxes and numerous cattle and mules.

Walker T. Harrod, representing the Biological Survey and the wildlife division, has gone to Burke county, equipped with 150 traps, and is capturing foxes in a section hardest hit by mad animals.

The Rockefeller Foundation will study the heads of the animals and the Biological Survey will examine the stomachs. This is no attempt to exterminate the fox, but merely action taken at the request of the State Board of Health to protect them and fox hunting as a sport, it was pointed out.

GOD RUNS HIS BUSINESS

When "Bob" Le Tourneau starts to speak, everyone within range listens.

The hero of this story, an adopted Georgian, has helped to build Toccoa from a one-time sleepy town to a thriving center of industry. "Bob" Le Tourneau leveled the land at Toccoa, built a huge factory, built homes for his workers and an airport for himself.

This is a word picture of Le Tourneau, worked out by a Milwaukee newspaper man, who was impressed:

By GUSTAVE PARST JR.
Released by North American Newspaper Alliance.

Dr. Forrest, who induced Le Tourneau to build a plant in Toccoa.

PEORIA, Ill. THERE is a company here whose president is Robert Gilmour Le Tourneau and whose chairman of the board is God.

The partnership dates from the time, years ago, when Bob saw the Lord "face to face" while praying in Stockton, Cal.

As Bob puts it, he made God his "senior partner" then and there.

It happened this way: Bob got down on his knees and prayed.

Bob said: "Lord, I need victory. If You will give me the backbone that I need and fill me with Your spirit so that I can work for You, I'll do whatever You ask me from this day on."

The Lord heard Bob's prayer and Bob saw Him face to face. It was so real that Bob went to see his pastor the next morning.

"Brother," he said to the preacher, "do you think that I should go out into the world as a missionary? I promised God last night that I would do what He wanted me to do and I want to make good that promise."

GOD NEEDS BUSINESSMEN TO HELP HIS MISSIONARIES

The pastor said to Bob: "Bob, let's pray about it."

After they had prayed, the pastor said: "You know, Bob, God needs businessmen, too."

And Bob answered: "All right, I'll try to be God's businessman." That was years ago.

Earlier this year, God's businessman, in his annual report to stockholders for 1939, announced that sales of $7,731,325.16 and net profit of $1,816,470.58 were the highest on record.

He also pointed out that he felt sorry for those people who are so materialistic that they can't see God. He added that he worked 16 hours a day but did a minimum amount of worrying.

"I am endeavoring to accomplish what I believe God wants me to do and this eliminates any necessity to worry," he informed stockholders.

Nor did stockholders worry much about this strange business partnership, because 1939 earnings amounted to $4.03 for every share they held. Incidentally, the stock of R. G. Le Tourneau, Inc., is currently quoted on the New York Curb Market at $21 per share.

Bob Le Tourneau, with the help of God and 1,450 workmen, makes the biggest earth-moving machines that, on wheels, rumble through this world. They are, he says, tremendously powerful but not nearly as powerful as the Gospel of God.

Bob Le Tourneau was born about 51 years ago at Richmond, Va., of devout parents. Three of his uncles and two of his sisters were missionaries.

At 14, Bob quit school to work in a foundry in Portland, Ore. At 16, he says, he found himself on the verge of moral bankruptcy, with the devil fast getting the upper hand.

"Just to show you the direction in which I was headed," says he, "my chum landed in jail shortly after God saved me and snatched me as a brand from the burning."

One night as Bob lay abed, the joy of salvation burst in upon his soul and he jumped out of bed to tell his mother. That night he saw the Savior for the first time.

For another 16 years he lived as many another Christian, trying to serve the Lord but not doing a very good job of it. He was, he says, on the verge of spiritual bankruptcy, when he went to his pastor and the two of them prayed and Bob became God's businessman.

But everything did not go smoothly at the start. He and another man had a garage in Stockton, Cal. It failed. Bob assumed the debt. He bought an old tractor and, as a small contractor, went into the land-leveling business.

A WELDING FANATIC WORKS ON HIS NEW IDEAS

Behind his combination tractor and scraper he hitched a portable welding unit, and every time he had a new idea for the scraper, he stopped, cut it up and welded in the new ideas.

He was a welding fanatic and in the old days it was said that Bob Le Tourneau even welded the buttons onto his pants. At all events, he was able to sell his old scrapers and make new ones—each a little better than the one before.

Then one night in the late twenties, Bob, still a poor young fellow, went to a meeting of the Young People's mission at Stockton. He was so inspired that, when he got home, he went to his drafting board and after an hour turned out the design for a power control unit that today is the nerve center of the mammoth machines that move mountains and make millions.

The present firm was not incorporated until the end of 1929—just one month after that "blue Monday" in November when the stock market crashed and depression No. 1 rumbled across the American stage.

Bob Le Tourneau found himself several hundred thousand dollars in debt. The sheriff was knocking on the door and the man who had already faced

More Peanut Acreage Would Help Farmers Heavy Imports Are Unnecessary

By DAN P. VAN GORDER.

LOOKING back over twenty years of his vast peanut-growing industry the southern farmer discovers that for every 100 pounds of peanuts he has sold in foreign markets since 1919 his own peanut-eating countrymen have bought back from foreign farms 2,438 pounds.

Converted into acres and dollars, these importations of nuts, peanut oil and peanut oil cake and meal, and it will be found that the southern farmer has lost an opportunity to increase his acreage by more than 18 per cent and suffered revenue curtailments amounting to more than $7,000,000 a year.

The complete story of these losses from the agricultural purse of the south, $140,000,000 in twenty years, is not complex or controversial.

It is simply told in accurate statistical records of the United States Department of Agriculture. During the two decades, 1919 to 1938, inclusive, the United States produced a total of 19,009,011,000 pounds of peanuts, of which there were exported 144,449,000 pounds. But in the same period this country bought back from the farms of other lands 3,521,776,000 pounds, with all importations converted into unshelled nuts. This represents an "import balance" total of 3,377,327,000 pounds for an average of 168,568,000 pounds a year.

However, despite the fact that peanut importations remained abnormally high for two or three years after the termination of the 1914-1919 World War, as accompanying tables indicate, yet this country's dependence on foreign lands for peanuts is not growing less. For the first five years of the period under study, 1919-1923, our import balance of peanuts was 302,521,000 pounds a year; during the next five years, 1924-1928, the average declined to 128,429,000 pounds, and the decrease was even more marked in the 1929-1933 period—to an annual average of 56,817,000 pounds. But beginning in 1935 the import trend moved sharply upward, the United States' annual balances of imports averaging 187,501,000 pounds from 1935 to 1938, inclusive. During the last three years there have been annually imported 229,138,000 pounds more than have been exported.

FOR PEANUT OIL

The nation's failure to maintain national self-sufficiency in peanuts and peanut products, according to government records, is explained largely by the fact that our farmers produce only about 60 per cent as much peanut oil as we consume. From 1919 to 1938 the manufacture 642,000,000 pounds of oil while we consumed approximately 1,080,000,000 pounds, a domestic shortage of more than 438,000,000 pounds or 21,500,000 pounds a year. But to illustrate the recent rapid increase in domestic requirements of peanut oil it is interesting to note that our deficiency for the last four years, 1935-1938, averaged 38,750,000 pounds a year.

To simplify for consumers as well as growers the further economic significance of this growing dependence of the United States on foreign farms for peanuts, all imports—nuts, oil and oil cake and meal—are converted into terms of unshelled nuts for each year as follows:

Year	Total imports in terms of unshelled nuts (lbs.)	Year	Total imports in terms of unshelled nuts (lbs.)
1919	398,963,000	1929	98,528,000
1920	362,032,000	1930	33,485,000
1921	147,170,000	1931	115,391,000
1922	40,219,000	1932	52,874,000
1923	110,510,000	1933	112,000,000
1924	141,517,000	1934	21,976,000
1925	161,296,000	1935	206,635,000
1926	78,187,000	1936	227,784,000
1927	150,808,000	1937	197,581,000
1928	140,968,000	1938	127,298,000

During this period 27,172,000 acres of harvested peanuts produced a total of 19,009,011,000 pounds for an average yield of 699 pounds per acre, and these were sold for a total of $768,360,000, an average of 4.04 cents a pound. Therefore, the 3,521,776,000 pounds of nuts imported constitute a potential productive loss of 232,000 additional acres each year for a total loss of $142,280,000 or an average of $7,114,000 a year.

This total, still translated into terms of unshelled nuts, is divided into: Nuts, 902,248,000 pounds; oil cakes and meal, 303,692,000 pounds; and peanut oil, 2,315,836,000 pounds.

MANUFACTURING DEMANDS MORE VEGETABLE OILS

According to the United States Department of Agriculture, American farms failed by more than 40 per cent in the 1919-1938 period to produce all the vegetable oils demanded by manufacturing industries for making cooking compounds, oleomargarine, printing inks, paints, varnishes, linoleum and numerous other products now fashioned from these indispensable commodities of the soil. Of all vegetable oils commonly included in this group the farmers of our country produced during the period under discussion approximately 37,000,000,000 pounds while consuming 64,000,000,000 pounds. That this general trend is proportionately reflected in peanut oil is seen from the fact that during these same years we produced 642,000,000 pounds, used 1,080,000,000 pounds and imported 540,182,000 pounds.

An analysis of past consumption rates indicates that national self-sufficiency in peanut oil will not likely be attained in the near future. During the first five years of the 1920-1929 decade our consumption of this oil averaged 377 pounds per 1,000 of total population annually. In the comparative period 1930-1934, when depression factors were influencing almost all consumption totals, the rate declined to 162 pounds per 1,000 of population. However, it is obviously significant that during the last four years, 1935-1938, domestic consumption rose to 859 pounds per 1,000 of population.

A PRIZE BEAUTY WORKS

A Hollywood view of Evelyn Keyes, of Port Arthur, Texas, and Atlanta, Ga. She has natural blond hair, blue eyes and practically no southern dialect.

The Hollywood correspondent of the St. Louis Post-Dispatch found a story for his newspaper in the busy life of Evelyn Keyes, a former Atlanta girl. Here is how he pictures her sudden success in the film world.

By H. H. NIEMEYER.
A Staff Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch.

HOLLYWOOD. TOPPING any set of rules on "how NOT to get into the movies" is the one which discourages attempted entry by way of a beauty contest.

In the good old silent days when looks counted 99 per cent and intelligence and acting ability split the other one per cent the beauty gals used to come out here from all parts of the country and, lots of times, make the grade.

It's no longer true. The girl who got the most votes in Bloomington or Bejunkt or any other town still arrives here with startling regularity about the time summer vacations begin. Armed with a letter from the movie editor of her home town paper, another from the manager of the Crystal Palace Theater and an order on a Hollywood hotel for a week's board, she is met at the station by a representative of whichever studio was forced into sponsoring the event. She is taken to lunch at the Brown Derby, conducted on a tour through the studio and then practically turned adrift to find her way back to the station as best she can when her short visit is up.

Beauty contest winners are a dime a dozen in Hollywood, which makes the case of Evelyn Keyes, a gorgeous blonde from Port Arthur, Texas, all the more remarkable. She not only won a beauty contest, but she has also grabbed herself a choice slice of cinema limelight. It just happens that there was not much connection between the two events.

SHE CAME TO ATLANTA FROM PORT ARTHUR, TEX.

Miss Keyes had to move from Port Arthur to Atlanta, Ga., to enter and win that beauty contest. She and her mother made the journey when her father died. Evelyn was 9 years old at the time and she grew up in Atlanta, where she went through high school and also studied dancing, expecting to make it her career.

The beauty contest was sponsored by Universal Studios and the prize was a trip to Hollywood, a screen test and a movie contract if the test proved satisfactory. True to tradition, Miss Keyes took the test—maybe there was no film in the camera—and was immediately forgotten by Universal in particular and Hollywood in general.

This lack of foresight on Hollywood's part injured Evelyn's pride. Back in Atlanta—the contest prize included a round-trip ticket—she decided that she would get into the movies somehow. She got a job as a dancer in an Atlanta night club and started in to save her money against the day when she would land in California again. She admits that dancing in night clubs isn't the easiest way in the world to make money or to save it, but she was determined to show a lot of Hollywood executives that they had missed the boat when they passed her up. Also, a lot of her friends in Atlanta had expected her to return with a movie contract. She was going to show them that she was just awaiting a call to start back west to fame and fortune.

There came a day when she figured that she had enough money to make the plunge. She bought a one-way ticket this

THE POTTER THUMPS THE CLAY OF A DYING ART

By HIRAM J. HERBERT.

GILLSVILLE lay quiet in the sun. July's heat spread a sleeping peacefulness along Main street. On the store's porch two old men played a slow game of checkers. Two others watched, slouched contentedly on a sagging bench. Beneath the bench a hound yawned audibly. And scratched. He settled his muzzle to rest on his paws, and sighed from his overdose of peace on earth.

Crashing into this lassitude, the train wheezed through, paralleling Main street. The engineer waved from his high cab. The group on the store's porch waved back. Soon the silence closed in again. Then somebody yelled at a mule in a cotton patch a furlong away, and a ribbon of dust showed a truck crossing a land lot.

Over the hill, a piece away, in a log shed it was just as quiet, and peaceful. But much cooler. The shuffle of a foot turned a potter's wheel. Bud Hewell was at his trade. His hands were cool with the touch of wet clay, his head beaded with the sweat from the labor of his art.

He had taken a lob of clay, kneaded it on the bench at the shed's wall. Then he placed it on the center of the flat wheel, and turned the wheel with his foot, grown prehensile with usage. As the clay turned, he pressed it and it became round. He applied water with a sponge, the wheel moved faster, the lump of clay began growing in height. It was uncanny, magical. His hands guided the destiny of the clay and it grew rapidly into a graceful jar. From the wheel he cut it free with a wire and placed it in the sun to dry. Later it would be dipped into a glazing compound and set in the kiln to bake.

WHEN THE POTTERS SETTLED IN GEORGIA

Gillsville, Georgia, is "Jug Town." There are four such potters as Bud Hewell, who's been doing it for 30 years. But "jugs" have been made there for better than 100 years. It's a tradition with the place, and although the revenue from this art has decreased 50 per cent, the tradition persists, hanging on like a stubborn dead leaf to a twig through the winter. Up through the ages, from that day when prehistoric man shaped his pot from clay and cooking fire, the ancient art of ceramics has come, like the long flight of a bird of antiquity, and settled to nest at Gillsville.

The lump goes on the wheel and begins shaping.

The lump climbs into the fashioning of a jug.

The Gillsville potters measure their work in terms of gallons. That's the yardstick of output. By hand they turn out thousands of jugs or crocks and each will measure the same. Each a separate product, turned by hand. Bud Hewell can turn out 400 gallons per day. In a year he makes 50,000 gallons. The town, in a year, turns out 200,000 gallons in pitchers, flower pots, crocks, milk jars, vases, jugs, churns. Churns constitute the largest output. An earthenware churn is superior to all others—they're the most satisfactory containers for milk. These go to North and South Carolina, north Georgia, and around the fringes of Atlanta. A five-gallon churn will sell for a dollar. The potter gets fifty cents.

"The small potter, like us," Bud Hewell said, a bit sadly, "is fast losing out. Fancy pottery is the go, now. And molded work, which is not pottery. Most of this is done in the north. Around here there are four pottery plants. They're family affairs, and the children have been born into it for generations."

Bud Hewell toyed disconsolately with a piece of clay between thumb and forefinger.

THE POTTERS' CHILDREN SEEKING OTHER TRADES

"But now, now it's different. We're not raising our children into the art any more. We're sending them off to school to learn different trades. It's a shame, too, because pottery is in their blood, and it's got to be in the blood to be done right. Just like anything else. My daughter is in Chattanooga now, training to be a nurse. She could be hand-painting pottery here in the shade of the chinaberry tree. But the old order is giving place to the new."

It's strange and a bit disconcerting to see "Jug Town" fading from the scene of antiquity. The ancient arts are our heritage from that day when God reached out from His throne and touched a gaseous nebula, sloughed it down with His hands, cooled it, and moulded it into a marvelous thing He called the Earth. He fashioned man, as we all know. Then He left man, in the midst of amazing resources, to his own devices. Man worked with his hands. Up through the ages man modeled and builded until this day when mankind has almost completed his building. Man, with his hands, has builded well—everything except his own social order. He has made his machines and departed wide from the craft of his hand-work. His machines have plunged him into mass suicide and destruction, but his hand-work kept him in peace.

"Jug Town" pass. It's a symbol, in its decadence, of an age of peace, art, culture, progress and production. A curious blend, but the fundamentals of civilization. If the older things must fade away like this, then the newer things can't last long, either.

One of the oldest of the crafts, the origin of pottery has no record. But wherever prehistoric man had access to plastic

MEMORIES OF A SOUBRETTE

"Juanita" was a coy soubrette in 1910.

Her first engagement in vaudeville was at the American theater on Atlanta's Whitehall street.

HERE, in her own words, are the memories of "Juanita," an actress of the old days before the first World War, a native Georgian who began her career in musical comedy, in vaudeville and on the dramatic stage in Atlanta, the theatrical center of this area of the United States.

Today, "Juanita," is an invalid. Some years ago, she was compelled to abandon her stage career through sudden illness and today she is bedridden in her adopted home in upper New York state.

"Juanita," herself, in her younger days a "soubrette," recalls in her story, the type of performance that lured the theater-goer of those days and some of the theatrical personages

By "JUANITA."

I was born in Columbus, Ga. My earliest recollections are of music, art, love, and beauty. I recall finding my first Easter eggs hidden in large bunches of blue violets in our front yard.

As a child I was in dramatic stock with my mother. The first part I ever played was little Mary Morgan in "Ten Nights in a Bar Room."

"Oh, Father, dear Father, come home with me now, Ere the clock in the steeple strikes eight."

Singing and dancing were natural to me and I also learned to do rope spinning. I obtained my first vaudeville engagement at the American theater on Whitehall street in Atlanta, in the early part of 1910, when I was 14 years of age. I did a western act, dressed as a cowgirl, and sang, "The Girl From the Golden West." Doc Baker, the lightning-change artist, was on the same "bill." He sang, "What's the Matter With Heinz?"

The American was a nice vaudeville theater in those days. Tom Holland was manager. The ticket-taker was a slim young boy who later became a recognized vaudeville act.

A short time later, I played the same theater in a village school act. Larry Weaver (of the popular vaudeville team, Hagerty and Weaver) was the teacher, and the "boys" were Joe Hagerty, Loyd Connelly and the late Paul English. The girls were Grace Connelly, Bootsie Hurd (who later became the sister-in-law of the late Johnny J. Jones, of carnival fame) and myself.

I sang a little song entitled "Funny Face," worked in "spot-light," and reflected the light from a hand mirror on a fat man down near the front row, much to his embarrassment, but oh, how the audience did enjoy it! That was quite a stunt in those days.

Days of the Soubrette. Those were the days of the "soubrette." A "soubrette" dress was a knee-length dancing frock with yards and yards of accordion-pleated silk skirt, and a bodice of velvet or satin on which were butterflies or bow-knots gaily bespangled in black and gold.

The "soubrette's" dances consisted of waltz, clog, buck and win, and always a beautiful "skirt dance," and she usually danced to the tune of "Narcissus."

In those days the "serpentine" dance was very popular. The dress consisted of 50 or more yards of cloth (the more cloth, the better), with long flowing sleeves and a stick sewed to the cloth from the sleeves down. The material was usually white silk, and it was a real art to hold the sticks and send the cloth whirling through the air in different shapes and movements, while various colored lights played on the dancer. It gave a very beautiful effect.

Atlanta Thirty Years Ago. The theatrical booking agent in Atlanta in 1910 was George Greenwood. The performers lovingly called him "Greenie." There were many small but nice vaudeville theaters in Atlanta then. A door or two from the American, on one side, was the Vaudeville. Many Atlantans will remember the sweet-voiced singer, a Mr. Barr, who sang "Illustrated Songs," and how everyone loved the colored slides to old songs like "In the Shade of the Old Apple Tree," etc.

A few doors away, on the other side of the American, was a theater where the Y. C. Alley Stock Company played an indefinite engagement with tabloid shows, musical, dramatic and western, featuring that dainty little actress, Ruby Thorne. Many will remember her delightful renditions of "Down Among the Sugar Cane," "Good Morning, Caroline," and "How Do You Do, Miss Josephine?"

Next door to that theater was another vaudeville house. Many will recall the lovely Duffy Sisters and how they used to feature that beautiful old song, "Just Someone."

Why doesn't someone revive it? "Someone to love and cheer you, Someone when things go wrong; Someone to cuddle near you, Someone to share your song; Someone to call you sweetheart After the day is done; Someone to miss you, someone to kiss you, Just someone."

Next to the corner of Broad street, on Marietta, was the Favorite theater and across the street on the other side of Broad was the Idle Hour. There were several small moving picture and vaudeville houses on Peach-tree street.

In those days many of the small combination houses were really "nickelodeons." Most of them had an old player piano on the outside by the box office. The piano ground out sweet tunes while sweet young couples held hands inside as they watched actors like King Baggett, Owen Moore and Arthur Johnson make love to girls like Mary Pickford and Lillian Gish, back in the old "Imp" and Biograph days. Sometimes they had a player piano inside the theater down in the pit. If the theater charged 10 cents admission they had a girl or a man pianist to play for pictures. The audience squirmed with restlessness while the operator changed movie reels and a slide was thrown on the screen which read, "One minute, please, while operator changes reels." Those were the happy days and I am inclined to believe that performers and, perhaps audiences, too, were happier then than now.

The big-time vaudeville acts played the Bijou, which was on Marietta between Broad street and the old post office (Jake Wells was manager), and I recall meeting McIntyre and Heath when they played there in "The Ham Tree."

I was in Atlanta several times during 1909 and 1910, and used to go to see the Emma Bunting Stock Company. Dear, adorable, tiny, red-headed Emma Bunting! Who can ever forget her as "Tess of the Storm Country?"

DO YOU REMEMBER? A few of the big road shows in the old days were "The Chocolate Soldier," "Polly of the Circus," "The Squaw Man," with Robert Edeson; "The Fortune Hunter," with Fred Niblo, and "The Little Girl That He Forgot," with Beulah Poynter. Other shows we loved so well years ago were "Abie's Irish Rose," Al G. Fields' Minstrels, Billy Allen, and Kelly-Schuster musical comedy companies.

Stock companies that far back always thrilled audiences with plays like "St. Elmo," "East Lynne," "Lena Rivers," "The Old Homestead," "The Country Kid," "Jesse James," "Ranch King," etc.

Girl minstrels were popular, also dramatic shows under canvas, and show boats.

Circuses were as popular then as now, but none ever thrilled me like Gentry Brothers' Dog and Pony Show, which played my home town each year when I was a child.

Memories OF OLD GEORGIA When Neighborly Folks Helped One Another in Hard Times

By ANN ETHREDGE.

DID you ever go to "a work-in"? If you lived in the rural areas of Georgia some thirty years ago you either did, or you refused the invitation and were considered unneighborly.

"For," declared one of this scribbler's reminiscing relatives the other day during a family reunion, "at the turn of the century and for many a year after, folks really helped each other."

Here the other relatives took up the threads of memory and started to unwind them.

"Sure, neighbors helped each other," said Uncle Jake. "It was a sorry neighbor that didn't go to a work-in. Remember that time I got behind with my crops on account of the spring floods and being sick, to boot? Grass was about to take my cotton and corn, to say nothing of the fatted and cane, so what did I do? I said to the wife, 'Honey, put the big pot in the little un. We're goin' to have a work-in!'"

"So as the usual custom was, I went around and invited all my neighbors to come and help me work out the crop. Well, come the day, and what neighbors didn't show up sent hands, and on top of that, sent their wives to help try the chickens and bake the pies. And when night closed in, my crops were as clean as any place in south Georgia. Me bashful about asking folks to my work-in? I should say not! They asked me to theirs, didn't they?"

THEY CAME TO WORK AND BROUGHT THEIR FOOD

None of the other reminiscing relatives could dispute Uncle Jake, but one added to his long speed. Said Uncle Ed: "I mind me of the time when my pa-in-law and all his family had typhoid fever right in the middle of cotton-pickin' time. Now Pa, being flat 'ol his back, couldn't give a work-in himself. But he had neighbors that went the second mile, and maybe the third. One of those neighbors got out and took it on himself to invite all the community to a cotton-pickin' at pa's house, and to bring their biscuits and ham with them. Come the day, and a field full of folks showed up by sunup. There were all sizes, men, women, and children, black and white, in that cotton field. And bless me, when sundown came, not a blessed boll of cotton that was open was left in the field. It was all in the cotton-house ready to go to the gin. And I can tell you pa and all his family had grins on their faces, despite the fever."

About this time, Uncle Beck, another reminiscing relative, got to thinking and he got mad. He had plenty of neighbors, and he was plenty mad too. "I always liked to be neighborly," emphasized Uncle Beck, in a tone that might be called irate, "but when my neighborliness gets imposed on, it cramps my style. All of you know how I used to go around and beg for things for folks, black and white, when their houses got burned up. For years and years I was given up to be the best beggar for other folks that ever was. It was real fascinatin' work. I just hitched up the mules to a two-horse wagon, and went from house to house you know, and nobody with a heart refused to give me a quon or a sheet or dish or something to eat, for the burned-out family. I got a kick out of it, too. That is, until Jobe Smith (only that wasn't his real name) got his house burned. As per usual, I went around and collected a nice turn-out of stuff, and took it to Jobe's folks. They stopped their wailing and let on as how they were powerful pleased to get it. They moved in the cottonhouse on the place there and took the stuff I begged for them. But bless you, that same winter, the whole Jobe Smith family got burned with pneumonia. Me and the Old Lady went over to set up with them, and you all have heard before what we saw. There Jobe was lying on one of the very beds that everybody thought was burned. Same way with the other stuff. The old chairs and beds that they had had since the time was right there. Well, sir, right then and there, I smelled a rat. And from that day to this, nobody got me to beg for anybody when their house burned. Honest or not, I can't take a chance."

"Still, Beck," protested another reminiscing relative, "you shouldn't oughter be that way. Remember how your neighbors helped you when all your hogs died with the cholera?"

AND UNCLE BECK PAID IN THE HELP HE GOT

Uncle Beck softened. He answered, "I sure do remember. Joe and John went around and begged pigs for me, that's what. And nobody flinched at givin' 'em either, sows and all. Next winter, I had just as much meat as anybody around."

"But you paid it back, Beck," continued the relative, "You always did know exactly when every man around had his ears out and fodder needin' takin' up. And let a shirt-tail cloud show up, and you didn't wait to see if it would flood. You got busy and helped get in the oats so they wouldn't be ruined. Course most other folks did the same thing for their neighbors. Neighborly ways were neighborly ways in those days."

Now Aunt Kit, another one of the reminiscing relatives, was sitting listening to all that, but she had little to say. Maybe she was thinking about her luck in having a good strong body that the Lord gave her so she could be able to be midwife to half the county, more or less. Maybe she was thinking about the sick she had nursed, and the dead she had laid out. For it tued out long ago that Aunt Kit's mission in life was just all those things. Babies for miles around were named for her. And the fevers she had helped cool would burn up the county if the heat of them all could be added together. Asked if anyone ever paid her for this service, she said, "Shucks! It'd a been an insult to me to offer pay for what was my bounden duty. Nobody in these square corners can point to Kit and say she didn't try to do her neighborly part."

It was a fact too. Yet Aunt Kit's ministry to the sick was nothing unusual. Most other folks in the community were the same way, except few had the gift of midwifery along with the other qualities. Back about 1915, when Grandma Ethredge had typhoid fever, there was no trained nurse within forty miles, and no money to hire one if there had been. But what need of them anyway, when the women of the community sat up with her and followed doctor's orders night after night for six weeks? Two would sit up half the night, and two more the other half. Next night there would be another shift on hand. And it's a safe guarantee that no hands were gentler than those volunteer hands.

But there always came a day when some did not survive the ministering hands. And neighbors were no less neighborly when the Death Angel struck. For when a poverty-stricken family was smitten, and there was no money to buy a coffin, the neighbors just got busy and made one. It took Cousin Ned to describe how they made the coffin when such things happened, and he was an expert.

"We just got plain pine lumber," Cousin Ned explained, "and nailed it into a shapely box as near like a bought coffin as we could. Then we covered it all over with plain black cloth. I've helped make many a coffin, and if I do say so myself, I'd as soon be buried in a coffin I made as any store-bought coffin you could buy."

"After the coffin was made, there were no hired hands to dig the grave, and nobody wanted hired hands if there had been any. That was the business of the neighbors, and no grave was ever dug at our churchyard, when there wasn't more than enough to dig it."

But by the time this Scribbler Relative had heard all these tales of neighborly ways, it began to look as though the women were getting the worst end of the conversation. And that was a situation that Aunt Ed could not permit. So she upped and said, "I guess you men folks don't know much about dress patterns. But I tell you, I've seen the day when I'd buy a dress pattern and nearly every family in the district had a dress or two made by it before it wore out or all got lost. But did I care? Of course not. It proved my good taste in patterns. Besides, it was neighborly, and I borrowed theirs, didn't I? Sometimes my pattern got back with a sleeve or half the front missing, but a little thing like that doesn't matter now. I'd like to lend my patterns again, if folks'd just ask me."

THE GIRLS MADE A QUILT BUT HE NEVER MARRIED

"And when it came to quilts," continued Aunt Ed, "I remember how I let the girls piece up a quilt for my son Tom, just about the time he was going over fool's hill. Like other mothers, I passed out the pattern to the girls, each of them made a square. Then I put the squares together and invited them to a quilting, and we quilted it out in one day. But the joke was on them. My son is still a bachelor, and I've already worn out the quilt myself."

It turned out that the ladies present had been to these quiltings dozens of times, when maybe three or four quilts would be quilted in one day.

When there was a mill dam to be built, 20 or 30 men were invited to the dam building. With their own wheelbarrows they hauled dirt until the dam was built.

House-raising day was common. Logs were cut, and notched before the big day. Then the neighbors came together and put up the logs.

Many of these neighborly customs are still practiced extensively, such as sitting up with the sick and the dead. But on the whole, do you think rural folks are as neighborly as they once were? Uncle Beck says not. He summed it up in this wise:

"I'll tell you boys" (some of the Reminiscing Relatives were hoary-headed though), "times aren't what they used to be. Nowadays we travel too fast. We don't take time to notice how much the other fellow needs us. In fact, I think we lack a lot being as neighborly as we used to be?"

Do you agree with Uncle Beck?

WHERE PEANUT OIL HAS DISAPPEARED TO

In accounting for the disappearance of 81,000,000 pounds of peanut oil in 1938, for example, which illustrates the general channels of consumption, the Bureau of Agricultural Economics reports the following interesting data: For manufacturing cooking compounds and fats, 52,402,000 pounds; for making oleomargarine, 3,593,000 pounds; in other edible products, 1,920,000 pounds; for making soap, 545,000 pounds; in miscellaneous products, 32,000 pounds, with the uses of the remainder unknown. Total factory consumption for that year was 62,461,000 pounds.

Since 1926 the United States has imported of all vegetable oils, edible and inedible, plus oleseeds used chiefly for conversion into oils, an average of $127,100,000 worth annually.

Progressive farmers are realizing in recent years that at least six of these oils and their raw materials—soybean, linseed, peanut, cottonseed, olive and tung—can be profitably grown on our own farms. And while peanut oil constitutes but a minor part of the huge vegetable oil imports now pouring into this country, yet it remains one of the potential commodities which should be contributing to the prosperity of a well-rounded structure of American agriculture. The following table shows the importations of these six oils since 1919:

A Prize Beauty Learns She Must Work in the Films

time, since she was paying the check herself, and started. She carried, too, a pretty valuable letter of introduction from band leader Ted Fiorito, for whom she had danced, to a certain prominent Hollywood agent. That was all she needed, Fiorito pointed out.

Certain, then, of immediate recognition and quick revenge, she presented her letter. She soon discovered that rumors which had reached her from time to time about the indifference of motion picture people had amounted, practically, to understatement. Her particular agent had a lot of high-priced clients and couldn't be bothered with an unknown, no matter how lovely. This left Miss Keyes on her own, a situation she shared with hundreds of disappointed girls who were also trying their luck in Hollywood.

BUYS HER OWN TICKET AND TRIES IT AGAIN

Evelyn took this second rebuff in her stride. She had been turned down by experts the first time and this was only an agent after all. So she took up the usual routine. She haunted casting offices, wangled introductions to directors and wore her best smile on every occasion.

Nothing much happened. Everyone else was wearing the same set smile and introductions were a drug on the market. Still she hung on, watched her savings dwindle, but felt that Hollywood was her oyster.

Then one day she met, quite by chance, Jeanie MacPherson, who has been writing screen plays for Cecil B. DeMille for more than 30 years. Through Miss MacPherson Evelyn met "The Boss."

DeMille was impressed but cagey. He didn't offer Evelyn anything in pictures but did give her a spot on his radio program, where she made good in a dramatic role right at the start. DeMille called in his staff, known in Hollywood as the "yes men" in cinema history, and told them he thought he had made a discovery. The staff, needing no further information, voted "yes" without a dissenting blackball and DeMille, thus convinced that his judgment was correct, signed Miss Keyes to a personal contract, the first of the kind he had made in more than 10 years.

Her first picture was "The Buccaneers," in which she had an important supporting role. Then came "Dangerous to Know," "Men With Wings," "Artists and Models Abroad," "Paris Honeymoon," "Sons of the Legion," "Southern Pacific" and "Sudden Money." She worked in all of these on the Paramount lot.

About a year ago Miss Keyes broke with DeMille and Paramount feeling that she was being typed.

Thoughts About Fall

By WINIFRED.

Black, with silvery highlights is this swagger length coat of softest mole. A Tuxedo collar and immense "pillow" muff are distinctively new style features. Mrs. Malcolm Foster is the model.

THE DAYS of chilly breezes and falling leaves are just around some autumn corner and around this same corner there are coats of soft, luxurious furs to put you in the fashion parade and to keep you snugly warm.

Forecasting things to come are these coats which show variety in furs and treatment. A decidedly new note in fur coats is a soft fullness, a kind of eased-in fullness, about shoulders and sleeves. Often there are yokes from which the body of the coat swings freely. Sleeves have lovely, interesting lines. Mostly they are full; often they are plain, and sometimes leg-o-mutton style, they are caught close to the wrist on a little band. Tuxedo fronts are new, but several types of closings are beautifully different and smart. Fur coat lengths in the fitted coats are even with your newest frock.

The swagger types are seven-eighths, 32-inch and the traditional jacket length.

If the new styles need be summed up in a one-word description, "casual" would be the word. The swagger motif with its essence of casualness runs through the world of fashionable furs as a theme re-echoes through a symphony.

Upper left is a coat of silvertone mole, 32-inch swagger length, with swing back, tuxedo front closing and "pillow" muff.

Upper right is a Russian Amur kolinsky. This is swagger length also, with rolled tuxedo collar.

Lower left presents an eastern mink, with fur "ties" at throat which can be worn in any one of several ways. These ties are worn by our model, "kitty-cat" fashion. The sleeves are large and full and may be pulled down to the wrist, or worn, as shown, as bracelet length with long gloves.

Lower right, a coat of Persian lamb has a becoming yoke treatment, with soft shirring at the shoulders, somewhat fitted lines, mink tails and handsome jeweled clasp for closing.

Center shows a luxuriously soft and beautiful silver fox jacket, which is equally wearable for daytime or evening.

Coats, hats, bags and gloves were selected from regular stocks in Atlanta stores.

The Constitution has newly organized a staff of fashion experts who are eager to assist you with any clothes problem that may arise. They will be glad to help you with questions of what to wear, when to wear it, and where to wear it. Russian Amur kolinsky is shown here in a swagger length with rolled Tuxedo collar. Large sleeves characterize this beautiful coat. Modeled by Mrs. Foster.

For daytime or with evening gown a silver fox jacket is stunningly fashion right. This one is collarless with large sleeves and exaggerated shoulder treatment. Worn by Miss Jean Dennison.

Eastern mink is the fur of this full length model. Sleeves are long or bracelet length, as suits your fancy. Ties at the throat may be worn in several different ways. Mrs. Foster modeling.

Semi-fitted, full length, full sleeves caught snugly at the wrist, and with becoming back fullness let in by means of a cunning yoke is this Persian Lamb. Mink tails and jeweled clasp make an unusual closing. Miss Dennison, model.

WHEN JUSTICE TRIUMPHED

Greusome Find Uncovers Murder of Aged Romeo

By PETER LEVINS.

ON the afternoon of July 20, 1938, a lonely spot two miles out of Guinazu, Argentina, became the center of intense police activity after a farmer made a gruesome discovery there.

Parts of a human body, as well as some clothing, lay scattered along the right of way of the railroad connecting the cities of Tucuman and Cordoba. At first glance it appeared that the victim, a man, had been struck by a train, but the police quickly discovered that most of the body was missing. There were a right arm, a left leg—plus scraps of trousers—and a head from which all the skin had been peeled, obviously to forestall identification.

The clothing included an undershirt, shorts, an overcoat, suit coat, the rest of the torn trousers, an overcoat, and a waistband or native scarf. All these articles were blood-soaked except the coats, indicating that the victim had not been wearing these when he was slain.

Underneath the pile of clothing, the investigators came upon some further bits of evidence—a set of false teeth, a razor blade speckled with blood, and a billfold which contained a lottery stub. Numerous cigarette butts were scattered about, indicating that the killer—or whoever had disposed of the human fragments—had spent considerable time at this spot.

The Guinazu officers removed the remains to the town morgue, then notified the Criminal Investigation Department at Cordoba, only a few miles from Guinazu.

Checking their missing persons file, the local police saw that, five days before, Antonio Salce, 33-year-old truck farmer, had reported the disappearance of his uncle, Manuel Salce, well-to-do lottery dealer and landowner. They summoned Antonio to headquarters, and he arrived with his father, Jose, brother of the missing man. Both immediately identified the billfold and clothing as having belonged to Manuel Salce.

BROTHERS UNFRIENDLY, QUESTIONER LEARNS.

"Do you know of any reason why anyone should wish to do away with Manuel?" asked Chief Auschter.

They shook their heads. "He had no enemies?" Jose shrugged. "Perhaps, I do not know."

Auschter nodded. "Perhaps he did, yes. It is my understanding that Manuel had many women."

"Yes, that is true." "It is also my understanding," continued the chief, "that your brother, despite his 60 years, continued to carry on his love affairs with undiminished enthusiasm, and that it bothered him not at all whether the object of his passion were some other man's wife, or a neighbor's young daughter."

"It is true," Jose conceded, "that he was fond of the ladies." "We must find the motive for this crime," said Auschter. "It may well be that Manuel's passion for the ladies has finally been his undoing. Were you, Jose, on cordial relations with your brother?"

The sudden switch in the trend of the conversation startled Salce. He hastened to reply, "On cordial relations? But of course! Do you suggest, sir

Chief Auschter spread his hands. "I suggest nothing. But in a murder investigation it is necessary to ask questions and to find out things. So far as you know, Manuel was on cordial relations with everyone hereabouts?"

"So far as I know, yes." "You cannot, of course, speak for the husbands and fathers of the women he has seduced or otherwise favored with his interest?"

Jose admitted that he could not go that far. "I am not acquainted with all his private affairs," he pointed out. "To tell the truth, it was difficult to keep up with him and his affairs."

The investigation seemed to show some progress during the day following the discovery of the crime. For one thing, a blond strand of female hair was found on the billfold. It was sent to the police laboratory at Cordoba. For another, a farmer of the region reported that he had passed the scene on the morning of the 19th, and seen nothing. And finally, the police learned that all had not been so cordial between Manuel Salce and his brother, Jose.

According to informants, there had been bad blood between the brothers for two years—all on account of a lottery ticket Manuel had purchased. Manuel, apparently feeling generous at the moment, had promised to give Jose half of his winnings on the off chance that the ticket won, and Jose had believed him, although Manuel kept physical possession of the ticket.

As it happened, the ticket had won five thousand pesos—about $1200 in United States currency—but Manuel had not kept his promise. He spent two thousand in short order, banked the remainder—and withdrew the remainder just a few days before he disappeared.

There was no money found at the scene. Robbery?

"It is ridiculous to suggest that I had anything to do with my brother's murder," Jose exclaimed when they questioned him. "You are off on the wrong track entirely. I invite the most searching examination."

The investigators left him alone, and concentrated upon tracing the last movements of the slain man. They learned that Manuel had been last seen at Cordoba on July 4 in the company of Felipe Corbella, a small merchant of Cordoba related to the Salces by marriage, Corbella could not be found.

Here indeed was something to look into. Perhaps Corbella was the murderer. Or perhaps he, too, had been slain, possibly to silence him. But the police soon learned that the second possibility had not occurred—Corbella was still alive. He had left Cordoba on July 22, two days after the crime was discovered, and settled in La Carlota, another suburb of Cordoba, where he had established a small business.

Arrested, he was ordered to explain, and explain quickly. Why had he left Cordoba so suddenly?

"I was afraid," he said. "Afraid of what?" asked Gustavo Caraffi, head of the Cordoba C. I. D. "Afraid that you would be charged with the murder?"

"No, sir, it wasn't that. Just a few days before he disappeared, Manuel loaned me some money with which to start a little store. When I learned that he had been murdered, I wanted to get away as soon as possible."

"Why? Will you please answer that?"

"I was afraid I would be involved in the investigation—because of the loan, sir."

He steadfastly denied any connection with the crime, but the authorities decided to hold him, pending further investigation. Police records showed that he had been arrested on several previous occasions, although not for anything very serious.

By now the Cordoba police had more than 50 men working on the case. They carefully went over the entire region in the vicinity of the spot where the remains were discovered, but could not find the missing portions of the body. However, they did come across several other objects—a new blanket, a woman's scarf, an empty wine bottle, and a piece of shirt matching the section found earlier.

Meanwhile, medical experts reported that they were undecided as to the cause of death. They said that the cutting up of the body had been done so savagely that it was possible the victim had been tied to a tree head down during the dismemberment. Some experts thought that the body had first been soaked in preserving chemicals. (Decomposition had not been excessive when the parts were found.)

Meanwhile, the police had obtained samples of hair from various blond women Manuel Salce had known. All these were compared with the strand of hair found on the billfold. On July 25, five days after the crime was discovered, Chief Caraffi received the following report from the police laboratory:

"The strand of hair found on the billfold corresponds most exactly to a strand of hair taken from the head of Luisa Benci Salce, wife of Antonio Salce, nephew of the slain man."

Could this be the clue to the mystery?

"Bring her here," Caraffi told the Guinazu authorities.

Luisa, who was 31, and the mother of three children aged 8, 12 and 14 years, denied that she had any knowledge of Manuel's murder.

"We have information," Chief Caraffi told her, "that he frequently visited your home."

"But why should he not visit us?" she exclaimed.

"Was he not interested in your physical attractions?"

"Sir," she protested, "he was an old man!"

"He was 60," said the chief, "but from all I hear he was still strong and in full possession of all his faculties."

"That might be true, but I know nothing about that," she insisted. "It is an insult to suggest—"

Caraffi cut in on her. "Do you deny that he often visited your home when your husband wasn't there?"

She shrugged. "I don't know what you mean by often. He came, yes, when Antonio was away. What of it? He was a relative. He liked to visit the house and see the children—and me. He was always welcome."

But this was only the beginning of Luisa's examination. It went on all through the night. And finally she told a story. Her questioners didn't believe the story, but they let her tell it, anyway.

She said that at about noon, July 4, Manuel Salce came to her home, saying that he wanted to see Antonio in private. She led him into her bedroom by such a route that he wasn't seen either by her children or by her parents, Carlos and Rosa Benci, who lived with her. She said that he took a nap while he waited for Antonio, who had gone to Cordoba to dispose of his produce.

UNCLE STABBED IN FIGHT OVER MONEY, SHE SAID.

Antonio, she continued, returned sometime after 5 p. m. He entered by way of the back door, and, unseen by anyone, slipped into her bedroom. Presently, she said, a quarrel ensued between the two men over a debt of 180 pesos which Antonio said his uncle owed him. The quarrel developed into a physical encounter—so she said—that she fled into her bedroom. Antonio, she said, struck Manuel in the chest with his fist, then pulled a knife.

"He stabbed him in the chest with the knife," she related, "and then when Manuel fell to the floor he jumped on him and strangled him."

The body into the cellar, where he cut it up. She said that portions of the body were thrown to the pigs, and that other parts were burned.

Burned where? She described a spot not far from the house. But the police could not find this spot.

Antonio was called in and indignantly denied the crime. His children and in-laws also asserted that they knew nothing about the matter. Surely, if there had been a fight in the house, they would have heard it. Why, here was a story. Why had Luisa accused her husband?

One other person had been in and about the Salce farm at the time of the events related by Luisa. This person was Luis Miguel Moreno, 44-year-old laborer employed by Antonio Salce. Police officers pounced on him and demanded that he tell what he knew.

"Your boss killed Manuel Salce, did he not?" Chief Caraffi shouted.

Moreno nodded quickly. "Why?"

"I don't know why."

"Was it because of a debt?"

"I don't know of any debt. I think it was because of Mrs. Salce. She and Manuel—"

"Yes. What about Luisa and Manuel?"

"He came to see her—often."

He said that he helped Luisa carry the wounded man down into the cellar. She warned him, he said, to keep his mouth shut. If he breathed a word of all this, she told him, all of them would be in trouble, himself included.

"Manuel was not dead when you put him in the cellar?" Caraffi asked.

"No, but he was badly wounded."

"All right. What happened next?"

"Your boss killed Manuel Salce, did he not?" Chief Caraffi shouted.

Moreno nodded quickly. "Why?"

"I don't know why."

"Manuel was not dead when you put him in the cellar?" Caraffi asked.

"No, but he was badly wounded."

"All right. What happened next?"

Moreno insisted that he did not know. "I—I assume, sir, that he died in the cellar."

"You say that Salce killed him. Did you see him kill him?"

"No, sir. I only assume that from—"

Luisa Salce was confronted with this testimony of the hired man, with the result that she changed her story. She admitted that her husband had surprised her and Manuel in bed together, and that Antonio had immediately attacked his uncle with a knife. Antonio had then fled, leaving her and the hired hand to drag Manuel down into the cellar.

She said that she took him food and water and tended his wounds as best she could, hoping that he would recover and that nothing would ever become public.

Then, she went on, Antonio returned on the night of the 16th and, finding the old man still alive, strangled him forthwith and dissected the body.

Chief Caraffi found this story more credible, although he felt that there were gaps that still needed filling in. For instance, it was difficult to believe that no one else in the house knew anything about the murder.

And if they knew about the murder, then they must have known something about the disposition of the remains.

Antonio, confronted with these developments, denied everything. He declared that Moreno had attempted to seduce Luisa and, failing in his purpose, had nursed a grudge against her ever since.

As for Luisa's statement, he denounced it as having been wrung from her by third degree methods. "At the very first opportunity," he said, "I intend to do away with this Moreno for the lies he has told about my sweet, faithful wife. No man of honor could behave otherwise."

All this occurred, he said, while Luisa stood by in terror. The hired man helped him get the body into the cellar, and also to cut it up. Salce said that the cigarette butts were placed beside the railroad tracks to make it seem that the victim had done a great deal of smoking before throwing himself upon a passing train. Apparently it did not occur to him that the absence of certain parts of the body would completely eliminate a suicide or accident theory.

"Perhaps I was a little stupid about that," he admitted, with considerable modesty.

"What about your wife's relations with Manuel?" he was asked.

"There is no truth whatever in that," he asserted. "Whoever says there was anything between them lies."

"What was behind the quarrel with your uncle?"

"Money—nothing else."

Once more Chief Caraffi called in Luisa Salce. He showed her the bulky sheaf of papers containing her husband's statement. "Antonio has confessed everything," he said, "so there is now no reason why you should not tell everything you know—including your affair with your husband's uncle. Manuel came to see you regularly, did he not?"

She nodded.

"You and he were intimate?"

Another nod.

"Did your husband suspect?"

"He knew all about it," she said. "He knew almost from the beginning, and he let it go on because Manuel gave me money."

His husband blackmailed him because of our affair. He kept getting more and more money out of him—and called them loans."

She said that on July 4 Antonio came into the house just as she and Manuel were getting out of bed. Antonio demanded 180 pesos, whereupon a quarrel ensued, during which Antonio stabbed the older man. She held to her previous story that Manuel lived in the cellar until the 16th, when Antonio strangled him. She admitted that she held the lantern while her husband and Moreno cut up the body.

Incidentally, the low temperature of the cellar explained to the police why the body had resisted decomposition as well as it had.

Salce, his wife, the hired man, and Luisa's parents were all arrested, and the case came to trial on February 28, 1940, before Circuit Judge Jorge Bazan Carreras. Antonio got five years, Luisa eighteen months, and Moreno one year. Luisa's parents were acquitted.

The slayer? The court took the view that every time Manuel Salce visited his nephew's wife he took his life in his hands, and that, therefore, he invited the fate which eventually overtook him.

God Helps Him Run A Business

moral and spiritual ruin now faced financial bankruptcy.

The pay roll of his small factory was five weeks behind when Le Tournau once again met God face to face.

He said to God: "Lord, how can I pledge money for missions when it is all gone?"

At that moment, Mr. Le Tournau recalls, God said: "Better make the old pledge again and trust Me."

So Mr. Le Tournau made a little deal with God. He said to God: "Whenever I am able to meet the pay roll, I will save out Your part."

NEVER FORGOT HIS PROMISE TO SHARE WITH GOD

Within a few weeks, the pay roll was coming through in time, and Bob Le Tournau has never forgotten his promise to God from that hour on.

In 1930, Le Tournau's sales were $127,797; every year since then has seen enormous increases with Mr. Le Tournau's heavenly partner getting a large share of the profits—as promised.

In 1935, Bob Le Tournau organized what he calls the Lord's Treasury and what is officially known as the Le Tournau Foundation, the nation's eighth largest.

Located on the sixth floor of the RKO building in New York's Rockefeller Center, the foundation has a net worth of over $13,000,000. It spends some $350,000 every year to preach the gospel of Mr. Le Tournau's partner, God, and has 10 evangelists on its pay roll.

Of the company's 450,000 shares of outstanding stock, 67.5 per cent was given by Bob Le Tournau to his foundation to co-ordinate his religious philanthropic and evangelistic efforts.

SALES LEAP SKYWARD: NEW FACTORIES ADDED

Perhaps most men would feel that, with such fantastic results, they had pretty well carried out their end of the little deal with God. But not Mr. Le Tournau.

The company's main plant was moved from Stockton to Peoria in 1935 and as sales leaped "skyward" and new factory additions had to be erected, each such addition was appropriately dedicated to God and His service with a series of evangelistic meetings at one of which ex-President Herbert Hoover also lent his presence.

"I believe," says Le Tournau, "that a factory can be dedicated to God as well as a church and that it can be used as a means of saving many souls."

Incidentally, over 2,000,000 religious tracts are published by the company every month for free distribution while the week-long plant organ strongly stresses religious thought.

In the plants religious meetings are held at least several times a week, usually more often. The day shift has a chance to attend at noon while eating their sandwiches or drinking their coffee; the night shift at 7 p. m.

Attendance is voluntary but the meetings are frequently jammed to hear Bob Le Tournau, some outside evangelist or a workman in the plant talk about God and His works. Invariably there is a quartet of workmen in blue overalls singing hymns.

BOB USES A SCOOTER TO GET AROUND PLANT

Bob Le Tournau, who works 16 hours a day, cannot, however, preach at every meeting. When at his Peoria plant, he frequently sleeps in his little all-welded, steel-paneled office instead of taking time off to go home. During the day he dashes through the factory on a scooter to see that some new mammoth monster is being properly put together—not with rivets and bolts—with the ever-present welder.

Most of the production equipment in the factories was designed by him and from his fertile mind have flowed 50 basic Le Tournau patents.

But that is just a part of the big man's job. He is not only a millionaire manufacturer but a flying preacher of the gospel. To thank his partner God and to preach the good word, he has five planes of his own.

Last year, he thanked God 500 times before evangelist congregations to whom he preached free of charge in such widely separated cities as Kitchener, Ont.; Charlotte, N. C.; Bangor, Maine; Johnson City, Tenn.

His planes are big enough to carry a soprano known as the Gospel Nightingale, a quartet of singing workers from the factory, a couple of violinists, or a group of Negro singers called the Carolina Gospel quartet.

Dirt Mover Le Tournau's church is called the Christian Missionary Alliance. He has preaching engagements for the next 14 months or so. Occasionally he uses one of his planes to carry the basketball team from the Peoria factory to play the team at his new plant in Toccoa, Ga.

The history behind that $2,000,000 factory—which turns out his gigantic self-propelled scrapers known as Tournapulls—is as fantastic as the rest of the Le Tournau saga.

Some years ago Mr. Le Tournau was in Omaha; there heard Dr. R. A. Forrest preaching the gospel; he was so impressed that he gave him $2,500. Head of a small religious school in the Hollywood star Walter Pidgeon, who portrays Nick Carter on the screen, reads "Among the Counterfeiters," an old Nick Carter dime novel presented him by The Constitution and the Rialto theater. The book was the oldest original copy submitted in the Nick Carter contest last February.

Nick Carter Reads---

THE CONSTITUTION and the Rialto theater last February conducted a search for the original Nick Carter magazine. These dime novels poured into The Constitution and William H. Davidson, of 309 Ninth street, West Point, Ga., submitted three of the oldest copies which were received in the contest.

Cash prizes of $200 were given to the winners of the contest, and Walter Pidgeon, who portrays Nick Carter on the screen, was given the oldest copy submitted by Mr. Davidson.

For his books, Mr. Davidson received $150. Second place winners were Miss Lilla Anderson, 508 Whitehall street, Washington, Ga., who won $25, and Harold King, 1385 Miller road, who received $25.

Friday Nick Carter returns to Atlanta. "Phantom Riders," starring Walter Pidgeon, opens at the Rialto theater, so Atlantans once again may see the suave detective and follow him in his exciting adventures.

northeast corner of Georgia, Dr. Forrest later rendered an unsolicited account of how he had spent the money. Pleased, God's businessman promptly doubled his first gift, and then flew down to have a look at the school in person.

BUILT OWN LAKE, HOTEL UP IN NORTH GEORGIA

The school, he found, was struggling to educate underprivileged mountain boys with strong emphasis placed on the Bible. Mr. Le Tournau's subsequent contributions transformed the poor school into a fine institution with splendid buildings, a near-by (all-welded) hotel, a lake 25 miles long which was formed by Le Tournau machines damming up a river, and his own airplane field.

To give the graduates a place to work, Mr. Le Tournau started the factory which now turns out the giant machines with the help of 450 mountain boys and God.

Many of the employees and most of the executives live in smart little cottages which are made at the plant of steel sections welded together. There, too, Mr. and Mrs. Le Tournau spend most of their time. Their eldest son, a Toccoa graduate, who married a girl from the district, works in the factory like everybody else.

DAUGHTER MARRIED WORKER AFTER WORKING HERSELF

Their daughter married a factory worker after working in the office herself. The three younger boys will have to get busy in the factory as soon as they are old enough.

Bob and Evelyn Le Tournau, the millionaire missionaries, are the same now as they were in the Stockton days when Bob built his first scrapers by hand, and Evelyn went off to call for a piece of steel, driving the "flivver" with one hand and holding the baby with the other.

When they moved from Stockton to Peoria, they rented a big house and took in as boarders some 20 of the factory workers. He likes to boast that he's as common as the dirt his big machines push around.

In addition to running a summer camp in Georgia, Mrs. Le Tournau has charge of another at Warsaw, Ind., where a small fee is charged for children of richer people whose religious education she feels might have been neglected. She, like her husband, flies from place to place.

Some years ago, Bob Le Tournau, his wife and a male quartet from the factory were driving to a little religious school in Kentucky when another car ran into them. Five of the nine occupants of the two cars were killed outright.

Bob had one foot crushed, a leg broken, both hips out of joint, pelvis bone fractured, a piece of bone broken off the side of one hip socket and his chest crushed. His wife was bruised and cut from head to foot.

The two were laid next to each other on the side of the road. Bob looked up to the heavens and said to God: "God, it's all right with me."

THE TROUBLE BASKET

They are dressed alike but they have different ideas on the subjects of the day. This is evidenced by Betty Jackson, at the left, and Mary Alice Clark, who decide questions by the old-time method of matching pennies. These two belles are so popular in the younger set that they very often have to match pennies to settle questions.

My Dear Miss Gwin:
We have been discussing a subject which seems to have two good sides and we wonder if you could give us your opinion.
Do you think girls should offer to pay half the expenses when they go out with the boys? One side insists that if a girl wants to go along "Dutch" with a boy that she will be more popular, for the boy and girl would be on a more equal basis. She also says that a boy would appreciate a girl more if he thought that she was willing and sensible enough to go half and half on the finances.

By YOLANDE GWIN.

think your friend is right in saying that if the boy wants her to go out with him, he will foot the bills. I think she will be far more popular than the girls who will force their attentions on the boys for the mere price of a movie or an ice cream soda. If the boys haven't enough money let them worry about it. After you marry, it is time enough to look after the boy's finances, but not when you are young and seeing the world through rose-colored glasses. It would seem that when a boy and ask him what is the matter or just wait for him to write? Everything seemed alright when he was here and I don't think there is anybody else. Do you suppose the letter could have gone astray? WORRIED.

Dear Worried:
The United States mail service is very good these days and I feel sure if your friend had written you, the letter would have arrived in due time. It is possible that your friend thinks that you and he understand each other, and that ten days is not such a terrific lapse of time, as you seem to. A lot of the United States males are allergic to writing and your friend may be among them.

No, don't write him. If he is still interested in you he will write, and like all men, will write when he gets ready. There is no point in becoming worked up over his apparent lack of interest. If he has been attentive by letter for six months and was still attentive when he visited recently, I think you will hear from him.

Dear Miss Gwin:
I don't have many dates. My friends tell me that I don't know the right technique, that I should call the boys and ask them for dates, if they don't ask me. I do not want to. What do you think? DATELESS.
Dear Dateless:
You are right. Don't call the boys. Boys don't like the girls who are always accessible. Let them do the pursuing, and you will find that your telephone will ring longer than that of your friend who calls boys. Remember in courtship, the boys like a little "run for their money."

needs financial aid, and his girl offers to help him out of the jam, he would admire her all the more. But it is the first step in losing your beau.

Dear Miss Gwin:
For several months—since Christmas, in fact—I have been corresponding with a boy who seems to like me very much. We went together a great deal during the holidays and when he left for the city where he is working, he wrote to me very often. He came home recently and was still attentive to me and I still like him. He has returned and I haven't heard from him in ten days. I am miserable. Do you think I should write

THIS WEEK IN HISTORY

JULY 21, 1861.
FIRST battle of Bull Run or Manassas. The Confederate forces held strong positions along the river and planned to take the offensive, but were instead attacked by the Union forces, under General McDowell. The Federals were successful at first. Both armies were new and untrained, and the fighting was severe. The Confederates retreated to Henry House Hill, where General T. J. Jackson made a heroic stand to rally them. At the same time the Union men mistook a friendly regiment for one of their own and allowed it to approach close enough to silence the artillery. The Federals retreated in panic to the Potomac.

JULY 22, 1864.
The Battle of Atlanta, the bloodiest of a series fought in the vicinity of the Georgia city between July and September of this year. The opposing generals, McPherson for the Union, and Hood for the Confederacy, had been classmates and friends at West Point. McPherson was killed at the outset, riding his horse up to the enemy guns. His army was, however, successful in overcoming the Confederates' resistance.

JULY 23, 1800.
The United States schooner Enterprise engaged and captured the French privateer Flambeau in one of the hardest fought battles of the naval war with France. The engagement took place off Dominica in the West Indies. The Enterprise was commanded by Lieutenant John Shaw. She carried 12 guns and 83 men. The Flambeau also carried about the same number of guns and men, but was considered a much stronger vessel because of the superior quality of her equipment.

JULY 24, 1929.
The Kellogg-Briand pact outlawing war was proclaimed in effect by President Hoover, ratification having been completed by 45 signatory nations. Among those agreeing to maintain peace were Germany, Italy, Japan, Great Britain and France. The movement originated as an agreement between France and the United States, but other nations were invited to join the denunciation of war, agreeing to solve their problems by peaceful means.

JULY 25, 1909.
Louis Bleriot, pioneer French aviator, successful in flight over English Channel from Calais to Dover—the first important airplane flight to be made over water. Bleriot's flight was one of a number of important aeronautical advancements made in 1909. In November of the same year Farman set a distance mark of 134 miles. By the opening of the World War flights of 200 and 300 miles were being made.

JULY 26, 1863.
General J. H. Morgan, colorful Confederate leader, captured by Federal soldiers at New Lisbon, Ohio, after a raiding expedition through Indiana and Ohio. During most of his raid he was pursued by Federal cavalry. He was forced into a fight at Portland and lost 600 of his 2,460 men. He was imprisoned at Columbus, but escaped and returned to command the Confederate department of southwestern Virginia.

JULY 27, 1789.
Congress created the department of foreign affairs, one of the first three departments to be established. John Jay had served as secretary of foreign affairs under the Articles of Confederation. When Washington became President under the new constitution, Jay was appointed chief justice, and Jefferson secretary of foreign affairs. Jay continued to hold office until Jefferson returned from Europe.

Typewriter Talk

By ROBERTA LYNDON.

The best way to get along with a woman: flatter her, agree with her and ignore her.

And the cynical old gent says never try to convince a woman... she's one machine that just wasn't made with a reverse gear.

An American translation: Listen to reason—listen to me!

By the time the modern Cinderella hears the stroke of midnight, she's often lost her head instead of her shoes.

You nearly always have to suffer for the wrongs you do. And if your conscience isn't able to dish out the punishment, public opinion will.

Maybe the happiness that money brings is only temporary... but, at least, it enables you to keep on making money to the extent that it's permanent.

A Doctor's Secret of Life He Helps Grandchildren Of His 'First Babies'

TODAY Dr. H. Boardman Stewart is 85 years old. And he is now busily engaged practicing medicine among the grandchildren of his first "babies"—whom he brought into the world—in Fairview, South Carolina.

Dr. Stewart was graduated from the old Atlanta Medical College in 1879, and immediately started his work as a country doctor with a workable motto: "Take each day as it comes. Eat sparingly, drink milk three times daily and—work hard."

That Dr. Stewart's motto is workable is self-evident. He has outlived his 41 classmates. And he has worked extremely hard for 60 years. For a quarter of a century the doctor rode horseback over a large area, fording streams, sometimes up to his horse's knee in mud, braving all sorts of weather. As roads improved, he utilized a horse and buggy, and then he progressed to an automobile in keeping with the spirit of modern times.

The old Atlanta Medical College accommodated about 100 students. The regulations then required two years' study, as there were no bacteria, numerous diseases and germs that have now been discovered which puzzle the brains and tax the memories of modern students—to say nothing of the lingual strain entailed in pronouncing the many syllable cognomens.

Emory University Medical School has complimented the graduates of the old Atlanta Medical College with an honorary diploma. And Dr. Stewart still has his AMC diploma issued to him 61 years ago.

"The contrast between the old and new diplomas is far less than the contrast between the old-fashioned family physician and the modern physician," Dr. Stewart declares.

The physicians of the old school, studying in a day when appendicitis was a stomachic, had a stern sense of duty. "The students were thoroughly grounded; examinations were hard, and there was no such thing as "getting by," Dr. Stewart recalls.

He recalls memories of Dr. A. W. Calhoun, who he describes as a handsome eye, ear, nose and throat specialist, and a fine speaker. And he speaks of Dr. John Johnson, Dr. John T. Banks and Dr. William Love, who "thoroughly understood his job of teaching physiology."

"Dr. Willis Westmoreland drove his old black mare to his top-buggy, and rarely hitched her to one of the hitching posts," Dr. Stewart says. "And he could tell when that mare was 'up to something'—doctors then as now, were good students of human nature, and knew all the signs of feminine wilfulness."

Dr. John H. Logan made it a custom to give a gold medal to the student who wrote the best essay. Dr. Stewart still has the medal presented him in 1879 for his paper, "The Relation of Chemistry to Medicine."

The school was in front of the present Steiner Clinic at Grady hospital and it is a singular fact that Dr. C. B. Stewart, of the clinic, is the son of Dr. Boardman Stewart.

In those days Dr. Stewart remembers an Atlanta resembling the growing town of Scarlett O'Hara's day—when ladies wore bustles and crinolines, and held their skirts modestly above their ankles when crossing the street. His roommate at the college was the late Dr. A. C. Allen, founder of the Allen's Invalid Home in Milledgeville, Ga.

Dr. Stewart is nationally known through his connection with the only memorial in the world honoring the "Family Physician," which was erected through his efforts in the Fairview Presbyterian churchyard. And here in the Scotch-Irish Fairview community, Dr. Stewart is still serving the countryside, a man who knows how to preserve his own health as well as the health of his patients.

A Californian Hails Lanier

A VOICE was lifted in California last week to join the nationwide chorus calling for the election this summer of Sidney Lanier, poet and musician, as an addition to the group of notable Americans in the New York University's Hall of Fame.

Dr. Kimmis Hartley Hendrick, of Los Angeles, a noted writer, forwarded to Oliver Orr, of Macon, Ga., some thoughts inspired by the poems of Lanier. One of the finest memorials to Sidney Lanier can be found in Los Angeles, Dr. Hendrick's home city. It is the Sidney Lanier library.

In forwarding Dr. Hendrick's comment to The Constitution, Mr. Orr urges that all Georgians and others throughout the nation, should help the group which is advocating the Lanier election.

Here is the article:

By KIMMIS HARTLEY HENDRICK.

THE WORLD can grow in nobility through learning about and contemplating the life of the south's poet-musician.

I have been reading recently some of Lanier's letters published in 1899, and I have noticed two or three sayings of his that inspire comment. There is a sense with him, which he, himself, said he found not when reading any of the German poets but Richter, "that God has charge, that the world is in his hands, that any bitterness is therefore small and unworthy of a poet." This is just the conviction so much needed by us all right now. It vibrates, angel-wing-like, through all of Lanier's living, and suggests that had the south had no other mission to mankind than to give us Sidney Lanier, its work would have been sufficient.

Lanier's was an infinity of caring, an intense feeling for his home, for strange places, for the ministry of music, for the science of poetry, and so he became, perhaps, a prophet of the new man who will stand erect in the world of the future.

Someone once said to me that when America considers its debt to the south, it may find it has much to pay because the south has always been in protest against the leveling-down process. But Lanier not only epitomized that protest; he voiced another. He indicated that one who will not stoop must nevertheless reach down the strong hand that will lift another up.

He suggests that the south will one day find the fulfillment of its genius in the task of applying its humanity to the solution of all human problems. As a northerner, then I hear his voice with joy.

When, with much excitement, the Laniers rented in Baltimore a "lovely house... with eight rooms and many charming appliances," although they had little with which to furnish it and Sidney Lanier must remind himself of "the dignity of being liable for such things," he wrote to his great friend, Gibson Peacock, the fervent words: "How I wish that the whole world had a home."

It must have been the depth of that longing in him which made him so great a man, to

AMONG ATLANTA'S DOGS

The beagle always gets his can. Ida Mae and Johnnie, the prize pups of Mrs. C. R. Stockard, of Riverside drive, in near-by Bolton, illustrate the growing appetite of dogs for the canned dog food.

DOG STATISTICS... Here are some figures that will probably bowl you over by their size and the fact that they all pertain to the United States canine population...

IT'S AMAZING... More canned dog food is sold than any other canned product... Based upon the 1937 figure (the latest figure available) of the U. S. Department of Commerce, the total pounds of canned dog food sold in the year 1937 was 412,436,254... or a value of $20,317,230... Another staggering fact is... canned dog food manufacturers purchase the second largest amount of tin cans of any industry... and are only exceeded by the canned milk producers...

OTHER DOG FOOD... which covered principally dry or biscuit food... amounted to 128,681,008 pounds... a value of $7,370,259... THERE'S NO TELLING what 1939 figures will tell... because dogs are certainly becoming more numerous and they all have appetites... As soon as 1939 figures are available... we will pass them on for comparison... The census of manufacturers is taken only in the odd-numbered years... ENOUGH FOR AN ARMY... The canine population is approximately 12,000,000... of which 3,000,000 are pedigreed and some 600,000 of these 3,000,000 are registered... FOR SICK POOCHES... There are 11,000 licensed veterinarians... of which 5,500 are members of the Veterinary Medical Association. However, not more than about 8,000 are actively practicing... The remainder of them are generally employed in meat inspection and the like... Too, some

By RUTH STANTON COGILL.

2,000 veterinarians depend principally upon dog practice for their income.

IT HAS BEEN STATED... and with reasonable accuracy... that there is $20,000,000 invested in small animal hospitals... and that the total veterinary bill per year... runs in the neighborhood of $5,000,000... insofar as the dog patronage is concerned.

DOG PUBLICATIONS... There are 19 publications in the United States devoted exclusively to the dog.

WE'D SAY... These facts and figures prove conclusively... that "a dog's life isn't so bad... and the devotion between man and the dog is pretty equally divided."

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS... Here is a letter from one of our unknown but worth knowing young readers...

Dear Ruth:
It seems that every time I take Terry (the dog) in the car he gets sick. We have taken him on long trips and short trips, but he still does the same thing. He is now six months old. Do you think he will grow to like riding? A million thanks if you will tell me what to do...
With love,
MISS BEVERLY BLOSGAME,
355 Pinetree drive,
Atlanta, Ga.

BEVERLY.
Dear Beverly... With proper encouragement... I am sure Terry will grow to like riding... Why don't you take him to a veterinarian and have him examined for worms? Chances are... this is what is giving him the upset stomach... Also watch his diet... don't overfeed him... and never feed him just before the trips... A good does of milk of magnesia may be helpful, too... Let me know how Terry gets along... With love... RUTH.

KENNEL CLUB NEWS... At the last meeting of the Atlanta Kennel Club, held July 9... plans went underway for their fall Sanction Show... which will be held Sunday, September 22... The hour and place will be announced later, but get your dog ready... It's to be a sporty outdoor match... and will provide a fine opportunity for you and the pooch to go through the paces before fall circuits start... Sanction Shows are just the ticket for breaking in promising pups and if you happen to be a novice... it will give you the hang of showing dogs...

DOGS WITH CHAMPION POINTS cannot be shown... Only dogs who have never won a WINNER'S ribbon will be eligible... PLENTY OF FUN... There will be prizes galore... ribbons... and even a parade of dogs with championship points... to give you an inkling of just the way Fido's tail ought to set... SPECIALTY JUDGES will also be on hand to take care of the many breeds we hope will be entered in the show... Ben B. Mathews, of New Orleans, has been asked to judge the Non Sporting Group and Toys... and Mr. and Mrs. P. J. Crowley, of Nashville, Tenn... will do all other breeds...

A Nation Trains Its Boys

OPPORTUNITIES to become skilled mechanics will be offered Georgia boys enrolled in the Civilian Conservation Corps through establishment of central repair shops in the CCC training camps.

One of these shops, and perhaps two, will be operated in Georgia at points to be announced later. Already there are 44 of these shops in operation in other states, and 63 will be at work by the early fall.

In each shop 25 or 30 boys will be given the special training which will eventually enable them to accept posts as skilled mechanics in industry or to do the same kind of work in the non-combatant divisions of the army when such are formed.

In Georgia boys are enrolled in the CCC camps through the office of Braswell Deen, state director of public welfare. H. B. Merriam, supervisor of CCC selection, has charge of the enrollment.

According to Mr. Merriam the enrollees who show the greatest mechanical aptitude and who show themselves to be interested and ambitious are chosen from the regular enrollees to go to the repair shops for this special training.

The enrollees sent to the shops are taught every phase of motor mechanics from tightening a loose nut to disassembling an entire vehicle. They are instructed in the operation of drilling machines, boring machines, and other machinery used in repairing motor and tractor engines.

At present a central repair shop is in operation at Salem, Va., where the pictures shown on this page were taken.

Story of Simple, Everyday Life And People Is Rich in Romance

How Texas Mill Hand Became New York Financier.

"NEITHER SUN NOR STORM," by Michael Stone. Loker Raley, Inc., New York. 374pp. $2.50.

From a Texas mill hand to a New York financier was the rapid climb of Gerald Benton. Gerald makes his ascent to the topmost heights of the business and social world in a thrilling and breath-taking manner. So quickly is he caught into the whirlwind of circumstances, that it gives him little opportunity to look back to his humble background.

Three women color the interplay of his life as he sweeps to new heights: Catherine Wainwright, the demure little school teacher of unquestionable morals, is the first to fire his ambition, while ever in the background of his success, lending encouragement when failure seems inevitable, is Janet Dare; then there is Valerie Breckenridge, the world's richest heiress, who would be the crowning achievement of his success.

It takes a great calamity to bring Gerald to his senses and put him on the right track to the real happiness that he was seeking all the time, though in the wrong way. This story will prove to be both entertaining and at the same time it will show the deep understanding of human beings that the author had at hand, both of the upper class and the lower bracket, from which Gerald started his climb to success. It is the story of a man who had every wish granted—money, great power in the business world, and social sphere.

"Neither Sun Nor Storm" is Miss Stone's second book, her first being "And Tomorrow." Miss Stone, who is still in her twenties, has many short stories to her credit, and is now completing a third book, entitled "The Philanderer's Wife," which will be published shortly.

Hypothetical Debate

F. D. R. AND THE PATRIOT'S CLUB, by John De Meyer. Ives Washburn, Inc. New York. 101 pp. $1.25.

Is F. D. R. a politician or a statesman? Is he honestly working for the betterment of the country or is he seeking to elevate himself in the minds of people and to carve a high place for himself in history?

All of the major arguments are set forth in this clever little parable. The reader may find it to believe that more anti-arguments are proposed, but, on the whole, a fair case is presented for both sides.

John De Meyer, author of "Benjamin Franklin Calls on the President," a previous volume in the same style, tells us of the "Patriot's Club," to which F. D. R. seeks membership. Surprisingly enough, its members consider the current President of the United States merely as another "candidate."

Samuel Adams is moderator and Daniel Webster the prosecutor in the unique examination of the candidate. Jackson, Jefferson, Hamilton, Lincoln, Monroe, Washington and Madison are among the chief questioners of the candidate. Their questions and opinions are interesting.

The account of this hypothetical debate between F. D. R. and the founders of our democracy is most reading for intelligent voters in the coming national election.

An Appreciation.

"THANK YOU, AMERICA," by George S. Brooks. Dodd, Mead & Co., New York. 199 pp. $2.00.

This book is Dr. Brooks' tribute to America, who came to this country some twenty-eight years ago from a little mining town in the Black Country of the English Midlands, to answer the call of America. It reads like a romance. Arriving in America with "a battered trunk and a battered courage," he heard the voice of America saying: "Is there anything I can do for you?" He answered that voice in achieving success that is almost without parallel. It is a book that ought to be read by those who complain about "dead end" jobs. In his "Apostrophe to America" at the end of the book, he concludes his tribute with these words: "You bestowed upon me your choicest gift—all the rights and privileges of citizenship in the best country of the world. So Thank You, America!"

Hunted Trouble.

"DANGER TRAIL," by Max Brand. Dodd, Mead & Co., New York. 311 pp. $2.00.

When there wasn't any trouble in sight, handsome Tag Endersby was the sort of guy who went out looking for it. His quickness on the draw and coolness under fire stood him in good stead, and no one had ever given him much to worry about until he ran up against the notorious outlaw, Dan Malley. Malley wanted Tag out of the way for more reasons than one, and he hired as tough a bunch of cutthroats as could be found throughout the west. It was then that Tag got his fill of dodging bandits and bullets in a mad chase that led clear across the plains.

The masterful hand of Max Brand here turns out a swift, rousing tale of blazing guns, crammed with enough suspense and constant action to fill two ordinary Westerns.

Unknown World.

"VOICES FROM THE GRASS," by Julie Closson Kenly, D. Appleton-Century Company, New York. Illust. 248 pp. $2.

"The grass in your front yard is to the insect an impenetrable jungle of braided blades—a region entirely pathless, unless we consider the stems of the flowers as roads leading up to their blossoms."

Here is an unknown world to almost all of us. It is inhabited by spiders, doodle-bugs, termites, fireflies, crickets, locusts, ants and other "bugs." We do not think much about the insects, except now and then to be annoyed when one gets down our neck or in our soup.

This fascinating land at our feet is a marvelous place. Some of these insects, when we get to know them, become close friends. Others we must admire. Some have amazing stories to tell.

Children should know about insects. They will appreciate life more.

Fishermen, too, could learn more about them. Some make excellent bait. Try catching some into a stream or pond sometime. A rise, a strike, a gone insect. Then why not a new source of life bait? We can't all be fly-fishermen.

The author of this book has several other successful ones, on ants, birds, insects, etc. Her special interest, in addition to music, are botany, birds and nature in general. Her style of writing is smooth, exciting, tensely interesting. There is drama and action on almost every page.

Wouldn't you like to know more about this world she writes about where "An insect might push with all its might against a dewdrop and never get wet?"

By a Master.

"HOW TO TRADE IN STOCKS," by Jesse L. Livermore. Duell, Sloan & Pierce. 133 pp. $2.50.

The name of Jesse L. Livermore needs no introduction to anyone who even remotely has an acquaintance with finance or stock market operations. His reputation as a genius of finance is beyond question and for this reason alone is unquestionably qualified to write on a subject wherein he is recognized as the outstanding authority.

This little book, consisting of only a hundred and some odd pages, contains the fruit of Mr. Livermore's long experience in dealing in stocks, bonds, and every other phase of market operations.

Interestingly written, even for those who have no technical knowledge of the stock market, there are besides important hints of the "Dohs" and "Don'ts" that every investor in stocks ought to remember.

For anyone interested in the stock market, from the huge investor or speculator down to a mere dabbler, this book of Mr. Livermore's furnishes a world of useful information that is presented in a most readable and interesting manner.

World Conquerors.

"ALEXANDER THE GREAT," by Lewis V. Cummings. Houghton-Mifflin Co., Boston. 462 pp. $3.75. With maps.

Alexander the Great, dictator, military genius, world conqueror, lives again in this contemporary biography.

"Alexander was far from perfect, either as a king or an army commander," his biographer writes. "Many of his faults in both capacities are so glaringly obvious that the careful student can only attribute his series of amazing successes to his utter and sublime confidence in the protection of the gods and the ascendancy of his star, and the incompetency of his enemies."

Mr. Cummings points out that Alexander the Great cannot be accused of the destruction of the Greek political system because that system had begun to crack decades earlier, and Philip destroyed it by craft and dealt it the final crushing blow at Chaeronea.

This biography is complete, authentic, and sources for materials are cited. It makes Alexander more alive than he has been for centuries.

New Book News

By JOHN E. DREWRY,
Dean, Henry W. Grady School of Journalism, University of Georgia.

CONTAINING a variety of stories and articles sufficient to satisfy the most diverse tastes, "The Bedside Esquire" (McBride) is a large, beautifully printed volume of some 700 pages containing some of the best material which has appeared in Esquire Magazine. The selections were made by Arnold Gingrich, editor of the periodical.

The stories and articles herein collected are as different as are the appeals of the pictures and reading matter in this wide-circulated but somewhat misunderstood magazine. Mr. Gingrich, in his introduction to the book, comments on this point, thus:

"Esquire has been absorbed, with recorded enjoyment, by the minds and eyes of such disparate folk as William Lyon Phelps and the late little-lamented John Dillinger. It is highly probable, of course, that they enjoyed the same things in it. For, as Raymond Gram Swing once exclaimed with an air of discovery, the combination of Esquire's text and pictures is as surprising as would be that of the mind of Madame Curie and the body of Sally Rand."

Mr. Gingrich calls the editorial content of the magazine, from which this collection is made, the "shady side" of the periodical, "because it has been so heavily overshadowed by the pictures." He says that "sometimes... weary of hearing the cartoons talked about as if they characterized the content as a whole (he) has been tempted to term it The Esquire Nobody Knows."

Divided into four sections, each of which contains a score or more of selections, "The Bedside Esquire" offers a galaxy of famous and substantial writers, such as Ernest Hemingway, John Steinbeck, Ring Lardner, Paul Gallico, J. C. Furnas, George Jean Nathan, Manuel Komroff, John Dos Passos, Havelock Ellis, Vincent Sheean, Erskine Caldwell, Ben Hecht, F. Scott Fitzgerald, Andre Maurois, D. H. Lawrence, William Faulkner, Theodore Dreiser, Westbrook Pegler, and many others.

In his introduction, Mr. Gingrich very cleverly describes the basis of division of the contents. The book opens, he notes, with a section of "shockers"—stories or articles "enjoying as their common denominator the fact that their appearance in print would cause something of a nine-day wonder or, at least, a seven-day sensation. Part two he calls "a pure relaxer, prescribed as a chaser to be taken for comic relief whenever the going gets too rough in any one of the other sections."

Part three is Literature with a capital "L." "We caught the portion which you mood is for a good story, even if it is Literature," says the editor. Part four is the "For Men Only" section, but not for the reason that will probably come to many minds. It is so called because herein there are articles and stories about things which women are supposed not to like—snakes, rats, the "messy details of human or animal cruelty," etc.

Such diversity of material makes the ideal collection for occasional reading. One can dip here and there and find something for any mood, be it the sublime or the ridiculous, the tragic or the comic. (Book reviewed on this page June 2.)

With Europe in the turmoil of a great war, Latin America, always of interest in this country, has an added significance. Such a book, therefore, as "The All-American Front" (Doubleday, Doran) by Duncan Aikman can be read with special concern and profit at this time. This is a brilliant and realistic appraisal of our neighbors to the south and what they mean to us. Mr. Aikman, it will be remembered, has written for various newspapers and magazines, and is the author of "Calamity Jane and the Lady Wildcats," "The Home-Town Mind," and, with Blair Bolles, "America's Chance of Peace."

William Faulkner has written a new novel, "The Hamlet" (Random House). This is the story of the Snopes family, the fantastic and fascinating group of queer individuals who have appeared in other works by this writer. Shocking incident and wry humor combine in the Faulkner technique to produce an arresting novel, somewhat suggestive of John Steinbeck and "The Grapes of Wrath."

Stories by three Georgia journalists are included in "Headlining America: 100 of the Best News and Feature Stories of 1938-1939" (Dryden), edited by Dr. Frank Luther Mott, director of the School of Journalism of the State University of Iowa and a Pulitzer prize-winner last year. (Book reviewed in this page June 30.)

Two of these Georgians are members of The Atlanta Constitution staff—Willard Cope, whose "Bright Lights in Atlanta," a story of the "Gone With the Wind" premiere, is reproduced, and Yolande Gwin, one of whose wedding stories was chronicled in this column.

The third Georgian is Medora Field Perkinson, associate editor of The Atlanta Journal-American, author of an interview with Douglas Corrigan.

"Jonah's Ark" is a grand story of the sea. It tells of the experiences that befell the crew of the "Lurline," the last windjammer sailer, the sea today. Captain Bentley hired a Jew by the name of Adam Abelsstein to work as a member of the crew and many strange things happened as a result of this. The men of the "Lurline" decided that Abelsstein was a Jew and that at their ill luck was due to having shipped with this man. Captain Bentley masters the situation, but many things happen before he brings his ship to port.

Adventure is the word that describes this story, for it is concerned with the lives of the strong men who sailed with the "Lurline" on this unusual voyage. It is a story that will appeal to those who like a thrill.

Only a man who had sailed the sea himself could write such a story as "Jonah's Ark." Roland Barker has had a colorful career. He is the son of the captain of a square-rigged sailing ship. He went to sea at the age of two and had made five voyages around Cape Horn by the time he was seven years old. Mr. Barker has touched at every important port in the world. This knowledge and experience of ships and the sea are woven into the story, playing a large part in the telling.

Here's a man who had an idea. And he carried it through. Hickey wanted to get autographs on a ten-gallon hat so he could publicize the hat-making industry of San Antonio. His hat burned before he could get started, but he made the trip by "working, walking and talking—mostly talking," as he puts it.

There is a sad ending to the tale, however, for as he was approaching his 47th birthday, he lost the hat.

Most interesting about this book is its unorthodox style. L'il Hickey couldn't afford to have a ghost writer work over his material, so he published the volume himself. It lacks the finished touch of the professional writer, but makes up for that in its freshness and its easy conversational style.

to many minds. It is so called because herein there are articles and stories about things which women are supposed not to like—snakes, rats, the "messy details of human or animal cruelty," etc.

Such diversity of material makes the ideal collection for occasional reading. One can dip here and there and find something for any mood, be it the sublime or the ridiculous, the tragic or the comic. (Book reviewed on this page June 2.)

With Europe in the turmoil of a great war, Latin America, always of interest in this country, has an added significance. Such a book, therefore, as "The All-American Front" (Doubleday, Doran) by Duncan Aikman can be read with special concern and profit at this time. This is a brilliant and realistic appraisal of our neighbors to the south and what they mean to us. Mr. Aikman, it will be remembered, has written for various newspapers and magazines, and is the author of "Calamity Jane and the Lady Wildcats," "The Home-Town Mind," and, with Blair Bolles, "America's Chance of Peace."

William Faulkner has written a new novel, "The Hamlet" (Random House). This is the story of the Snopes family, the fantastic and fascinating group of queer individuals who have appeared in other works by this writer. Shocking incident and wry humor combine in the Faulkner technique to produce an arresting novel, somewhat suggestive of John Steinbeck and "The Grapes of Wrath."

Stories by three Georgia journalists are included in "Headlining America: 100 of the Best News and Feature Stories of 1938-1939" (Dryden), edited by Dr. Frank Luther Mott, director of the School of Journalism of the State University of Iowa and a Pulitzer prize-winner last year. ### DUNCAN AIKMAN, author of "The All-American Front."

During the 80's, Sioux City was like a giant, one foot on the shores of the sprawling Missouri, the other deep in the black loam of Iowa. But it was young and Anthony was young. Its dreams were his dreams, so he found both thrills and romance in recording in Major Gavin's ledger at the bank, checks written for lands sold at fabulous prices. Later, when he combined with the brilliant legal mind of Charley Blessington his own cool business acumen, he plunged deep into this mid-western treasure chest. During the boom days that followed, money poured in from the east, and trains brought fortune seekers to Sioux City, which had its shadowy Soudan and its borderland gambling parlor. It also had its formal balls, given in big Victorian houses. At one of these, Anthony met again his childhood friend, Brenda Cathcart. Brenda and Mavis were woven into the life of this young financier like gay and richly colored flowers, while Helmer Bergeson, Tom Bentley and those estimable gentlemen of the older school, Dr. Trant and Major Gavin, form the solid background in the steady pattern of Anthony Trant's life.

In this novel of Sioux City are also vistas of wide stretches of corn fields, verdant at times, dusty or icy at others, the scenes of which are as vivid as the characters are vigorous. A realist in every sense but the disagreeable, the author's interpretation of life is full of warmth and compassion, and, as the trail pit unfolds, the reader lives back into those days "long gone and far away."

Screwball Adventure.

"OUR ARABIAN NIGHTS," by Ruth and Helen Hoffman. Carrick & Evans, New York. 307 pp. $2.75.

If you are in search of a treatise on the economy, politics and military strategy of the Near East, this is not meant for you. But if, on the other hand, you are frustrated by troop tactics, bored by trade treaties and exasperated by timely theories, you likely will find refreshment in the screwball adventures of the Hoffman twins, Ruth and Helen, in fabled Baghdad.

A sequel to their uproarious book, "We Married an Englishman," the newest volume undertakes to relate their adventures when Husband Douglas—one never learns definitely who husband—undertakes a large construction job for the Iraq government. Their woes with a rented Arab house, with self-designed furniture, with unpredictable neighbors and quiet unconscionable servants—to say nothing of a menagerie consisting of 27 assorted animals and birds, including a wild boar—would have downed anyone without the yard-wide sense of the ridiculous which the twins possessed.

Despite impending riots and personal danger from a tribal blood feud, they ultimately achieved a long-cherished ambition to visit a desert sheik. And when they claim to have been the first American twins ever to live in a bedouin harem, one is inclined to accept it as so, without argument. It is typical Hoffman hardiness.

Delightfully original line drawings by the authors—both artists with an eye for the amusing—liven the already entertaining text.

Tour of Ireland.

"GOING NATIVE," by Oliver St. John Gogarty. Duell, Sloan & Pearce, Inc., New York. 294 pp. $3.00.

Dr. Oliver St. John Gogarty, known as "the wildest wit in Ireland," leaves his home because of his disillusionment and disappointment in DeValera's government, and as Gideon Ouseley, takes a journey through English country houses.

"Going Native" begins with Ouseley's talk with William Butler Yeats, who tells him that romantic Ireland is dead, and that the best conversation and the best "traffic in ideas" is off for "the island."

His friend the vicar describes the English as "queer folk, with their lack of soul and their hard materialism, but they are good people to live amongst." Ouseley's account of his travel amongst these folk is whimsical set forth. Dr. Gogarty describes encounters with mildly insane Englishmen; experiences at a fantastic country house, Twitings; and half-hearted love affairs with Parnies, the shocking young niece of the vicar, and one or two other Englishwomen.

Vicars, lords, and less noble personages rudely talking, loving, and living as they please, are introduced in Dr. Gogarty's ramblings, which sometimes become vague. Nevertheless they sparkle with a delicious wit, apparently exhibited for his own enjoyment and with little effort toward capturing readers indifferent to his particular combination of poetry and ribaldness.

Poland Before Hitler Arrived And Terrors of the Invasion

Story of Mid-West.

SIoux CITY, by J. Hyatt Downing. G. P. Putnam's Sons. New York. 314 pp. $2.50.

When Anthony Trant returned from college in 1884, it was to enter the banking business rather than follow after his father and become a physician. At a farmhouse out on the prairie roads of Iowa, where Dr. Trant was called professionally, Anthony met Mavis Garnett, whose sweetness attracted him as much as her surroundings repelled, for since childhood he had felt that without money there could be no happiness.

During the 80's, Sioux City was like a giant, one foot on the shores of the sprawling Missouri, the other deep in the black loam of Iowa. But it was young and Anthony was young. Its dreams were his dreams, so he found both thrills and romance in recording in Major Gavin's ledger at the bank, checks written for lands sold at fabulous prices. ### Comedy-Novel

"MONKEY ON A STICK," by Henry W. Clune. William Morrow & Co., New York. 314 pp. $2.00.

Be prepared. Get set for a few hours of laughing. Remember, when you were a kid and you had you a "Monkey on a Stick," and what fun you had with it? That was just a foretaste of the real enjoyment you'll find between the covers of Henry Clune's new comedy-novel.

This is a completely wacky country and every class, profession and whatnot has its own clowns and lunatics of a special kind. You'll find in your own neighborhood the very kind of folks who people "Monkey on a Stick," but you've never had the opportunity to watch their antics as closely as you may in this book.

It's a wholly entertaining comedy of a meek little man with a hypnotic radio voice—a man whose voice brought him into the midst of a boom for President. A story with Wiloughby as its central figure, but peopled, too, with as colorful a throng as you'll find anywhere under one tent—and each one of them a story in himself or herself.

Pick up "Monkey on a Stick" and you'll not lay it down until you've gone from cover to cover. It's that good.

Packs a Wallop.

"SPRING OFFENSIVE," by Herbert Clyde Lewis. The Viking Press, New York. 223 pp. $2.00.

There's something about Lewis' writing you'll never forget—an indefinable quality that will etch every line of his story on your memory to remain there through years to come.

Only 30 years old, Lewis remembers little of the last World War, but he writes with a brilliant imagination of the one now searing Europe's vitals. His "Spring Offensive" is a masterful portrayal of a human nightmare in the weird lands now flanked by the Maginot and Siegfried lines—a compelling story of Peter Winston's reaction to the sights and emotions which surround him there.

Getting Religion Out of the Comic Strips

By HAROLD MARTIN.

THE BITTER pill of truth has always been best administered in a sugar coating of humor. The jester was the only man who could speak truth to the King without fear of losing his head on the block.

Will Rogers dressed many a sage observation in the trappings of wit, and Bugs Baer's insanities conceal a sharp and telling point. Even the modern comic strip carries its underlying moral, strongly made, so that the youngest mind can understand.

Lady Plushbottom epitomizes the futility of swank, and Uncle Bim's mother-in-law the uselessness of seeking social prestige undeserved. Joe Palooka, the prizefighter, is the embodiment of strength, gentleness and fair play, and Superman expresses the wish that is in every man or boy, to have the power to help the weak and right their wrongs, no matter what the power of the evil forces opposing.

Little Orphan Annie's life teaches courage and optimism under adversity, and Popeye the Sailor is a daily lesson in being strong, truthful and brave.

These things are latent in the comic strip and to one man, at least, their message is worth bringing out and stressing, even in the church. His name is Dean Raimundo de Ovies, of the Cathedral of St. Philip, and the people of the comic strips are his exemplars of character.

Using them, he finds in many a comic strip hero the counterpart of some Biblical character—the blundering, helpful, impulsive dog, Napoleon, for instance, has the same well-meaning, but some times misguided traits as the impulsive apostle Peter.

His idea is new, but already it has been taken up. Church and lay periodicals throughout the country have taken note of what he is doing. The tools of teaching lie ready to hand in the things of everyday life. To teach the Bible he has taken those things that are close to the minds and understanding of children.

From the size of his class, the enthusiasm, and the recognition he has been accorded, in the words of the comic strip, "he seems to have something there."

The Constitution Took Peaches to Arkansas

Clarksville, Ark.

AN advertisement that appeared in The Atlanta Constitution in 1893 is partly responsible for the staging of the third annual Johnson county peach festival to be held here July 25.

The advertisement launched the peach growing industry in Johnson county, second largest peach-producing area in Arkansas and once the site of more peach trees than any other county in the United States. The peach festival here will be the only one of its kind County Herald at Clarksville.

Back in 1893, J. R. Tolbert was editor of the old Johnson County Herald at Clarksville. J. J. Taylor was a neighbor of his. An article in the Clarksville paper a few years later tells how it all started. The article, signed by Taylor, says:

"In 1893, J. R. Tolbert and I were subscribers to The Atlanta Constitution. In one issue there appeared an article about a new variety of peaches that had been developed in that state and which was called 'Elberta,' after the daughter of the nurseryman who originated the peach. Mr. Tolbert and I decided to try them, so we ordered some trees, which were priced at five cents per dozen. I sent for six trees, but only three of them lived. In three years they bore fruit that looked like cantaloupes in comparison with other varieties of peaches with which we were familiar. Mr. Tolbert set out about a hundred trees."

Word of the success of the results obtained by Tolbert and Taylor spread throughout the section and even to other states. Fruit men came from as far away as St. Louis to investigate, and wondered if their eyes were deceiving them when they saw the size and color of the fruit. The Missouri Pacific Railroad Company employed a man to spread the gospel of the peach industry among the farmers of the county. The idea caught on, and in 1901 the first rail shipment of peaches was made from the county.

The festival to be held here this month will celebrate four consecutive bumper crops of peaches in the county.

All of northwest Arkansas will join in the celebration, with a score of towns expected to send—as they did last year—entrants in a "Miss Northwest Arkansas" contest to be held in connection with the festival. Johnson county's entrant will be "Queen Elberta III," who will be chosen from six local candidates.

The program will include a parade through the business district, the crowning of "Queen Elberta III" on the athletic field of the College of the Ozarks, the crowning of "Miss Northwest Arkansas" at the queen's ball and an address by a speaker from the speaker's bureau of the Democratic national committee. Governor Carl E. Bailey, of Arkansas will be an honor guest. Johnson county has nearly 7,000 acres in peach trees, most of the acreage being in the variety first introduced through the 1893 advertisement in The Atlanta Constitution—the Elberta. The county is second in peach acreage in Arkansas only to the Nashville area, which lies in three counties. While the drought years of a decade ago threatened the industry and caused the county to drop from its position of having more peach trees than any other county in the country, the trend in the past three to five years has been to replant and the acreage is on the upgrade again.

The Constitution Air Cadets

Boys, Girls Are Learning To Be Pilots

BOYS AND GIRLS throughout the United States between the ages of 18 and 26 years are learning to fly and are being taught the principles of aviation in the Civilian Pilot's Training Course.

And all over the country younger boys and girls, from 10 to 21 years of age, are also getting the ground work of aviation, and are studying the same subjects as the Civil Aeronautics Authority flight students.

These courses are obtained through the Air Cadet Corps, and in the southeast hundreds of youngsters have joined The Constitution Air Cadet Corps, also sanctioned by the Civil Aeronautics Authority.

The first courses of study sent to cadets on joining the corps, are history of aviation, aeronautical terms, and model design and building. Examinations will be conducted on these subjects and the cadets, who are now wearing bronze cadet wings, will win their silver lieutenant's wings.

You may join the corps by filling out and mailing the application on this page to The Constitution Air Cadet commander.

Work is under way to form squadrons of 10 or more boys and girls in a community who would like to study aviation and build model planes as a group. The Constitution Air Cadet commander will be glad to help you form your squadron. You may apply to the commander for a charter as soon as you have organized at least ten fellow cadets, or friends who wish to become cadets.

Don't forget your model building. This year at Bass Junior High school for the first time a summer recreational school is being held. Here four members of the Tech High School Airplane Club are conducting a model-building class. This class is open to all junior and senior high school students in Atlanta, and although the classes have been in progress for the past two weeks, you may register and join the class at any time.

Model plane builder George Trammell went berserk last week when his tiny gas-powered model crashed three times during an afternoon of flying. So he grabs an oversized wrench, takes to the ground, and gets to work, trying to rebuild the motor.

A Flying Guinea Pig Is in the Air

By MAURICE RODDY, National Air Cadet Commander.

ON the rails the "90 and 9" was a famous locomotive and it contributed some of the early romantic chapters to railroading. In the air it is "365" that is probably the world's most unusual and famous plane.

Known as the "flying guinea pig," the plane is a twin engine air transport which has been taken out of regular scheduled service by United Airlines and is now being used exclusively as a flying laboratory for the development of air safety.

One of the first acts of the lab engineers was to rip out the seats on one side of the plane and install a work bench and a test stand where they could mount delicate recording devices and in actual flight check the progress of their experiments with safety devices, new radio and communications equipment, new navigation aids and other mechanical developments first given birth in the flying laboratory.

Another development aboard the flying laboratory was the sensitive altimeter which shows the clearance above the ground instead of the altitude above sea level. This reading is accomplished through transmission of a radio signal to the earth, which is reflected back to the airplane and the measurement of elapsed time between the transmission and the reception is translated into a reading of altitude in feet.

PRESENT RESEARCH At present the flying laboratory is engaged in intensive research into two developments which will exert a far-reaching influence on airlines operation. First is the matter of landing an airplane by instrument control, and second, is the study of long-range noise-free transmission.

Although the greater percentage of commercial flying is on instruments, landings still represent a manual operation and the pilot must have a view of the airport to bring his plane in for a safe landing. However, Captain R. T. Frenz has accomplished more than 1,000 zero landings with the flying guinea pig. Expectations are that it will not be long until scheduled landings are permitted under no-visibility conditions at the airports. Flight research into the problem of blind landings has been conducted particularly at Newark, N. J., and Indianapolis, using a number of transmission landing systems. The other major problems occupying most of the flight time of "365" is a matter involving the necessity of longer communications. At present communication is successful over distances of 200 miles. Airlines dispatch systems over a distance of 2,600 miles with only three major terminals present another problem.

Long-range noise-free transmission presents for solution many unknown factors. However, engineers aboard the flying guinea pig hope to develop for air transport communication a system by which an entire line of radio ranges may be coupled to the radio apparatus and to an automatic pilot in such a manner that an airplane could be held on a definite course without manipulation of radio controls, thus making the flight of an airplane as simple as the ascent or descent of automatic elevators in a skyscraper.

Accordingly the flying guinea pig is winging its way through the air today developing tomorrow's airway aids.

Airmen And Their Autographs

Alton N. Parker

When one flies across the pole, a person naturally achieves international fame, but when a pilot wings his way across both North and South Poles, that is really an aerial double-header of achievement.

A aviation's "double-header" hero is none other than Alton N. Parker, B. Parker, now a first officer for TWA.

When Captain Parker, who was with Admiral Byrd on his arctic expeditions, flew over the South Pole he carried with him the colors of aviation post of Chicago, Captain Parker was awarded the distinguished FLYING CROSS for his polar flights.

motorless flight training makes development of power pilots an easier task.

Q—In connection with a power dive, what does the term IOG mean?

A—G is the symbol of gravity and IO indicates the power to which it has been raised in the force exerted on a plane in pulling out from a terminal-velocity dive.

Answers

Q—Do all airplanes have the letters NC on them?

A—No, these classification letters are only placed on aircraft by the Civil Aeronautics Authority after approved stress analysis and drawings are filed in Washington and the plane has passed all its flight tests.

Q—Is gliding or motorless flight increasing in the U. S.?

A—There are many indications that gliding is enrolling additional enthusiasts and numerous soaring societies are being organized. Some aviation experts are of the opinion that

LIGHT COMEDY—"My Love Came Back," a "sleeper" film (one which surprises everyone, including producers, with its success) comes Friday to the Fox. Spring Byington plays the harp Charles Winninger, the bass fiddle, and Ann Gillis, the piano, in a family get-together. Boring, eh what, Charles? Romance is provided by Olivia de Havilland and Jeff Lynn.

'I'm No She-Villain'—Miss Farmer

Frances Farmer arrived in Hollywood to take the leading role in Edward Small's "South of Pago Pago," coming Friday to Loew's theater, preceded by a reputation for being a problem child. She "didn't like Hollywood," she was "uppish," she had too much "temperament."

But the first words she spoke when she landed at the airport were: "Boy, it's good to be back home in Hollywood!"

To say her statement surprised her critics would put it mildly. They insisted she was putting on an act, that she was still "feuding" with Hollywood. Frances herself was puzzled at this attitude.

"At first," she said, "it all seemed very funny. Then it took a serious vein—I began to discover that too many people honestly thought that I was some kind of an off-stage she-villain."

To the people who worked with Frances Farmer on the "South of Pago Pago" set—Jon Hall, Olympe Bradna, Victor McLaglen, Gene Lockhart—the story that she was hard to get along with seemed preposterous. She picked her companions at random, with no thought of caste or rank. She likes to talk, and she doesn't care much with whom she talks—star, extra or property man.

As for the charge that she is uppish, the explanation is simple. When she first came to Hollywood, it "was like coming into a new world. I was literally plunged into a position of prominence and I really didn't know what to do with it. So I sort of crawled into a shell and tried my best to act natural. I am afraid that many people took this as an attitude of supposed superiority and came to the conclusion that I was—to use an unflattering but quite understandable expression—fat-headed."

"Naturally, there was no way I could find out what people were thinking about me. And you can imagine my surprise when I began seeing, first in this column and then in that, that Frances Farmer was upstaging Hollywood. It was something of a shock. I'd never faced a problem like that back in Seattle, and I didn't know the solution. Maybe I crawled

Two Fight Films At Capitol

Complete official motion pictures of the Max Baer vs. Tony Galento fight and the Joe Louis vs. Arturo Godoy fight, will be presented as a special added attraction at the Capitol theater starting Thursday.

Neither has been shown in Atlanta before.

The Baer-Galento films are said to be especially fast because as these pictures will show there was plenty of action throughout the fight and sport fans will have the opportunity to make a close-up study of Baer in action to determine as to his qualifications to meet Joe Louis in September.

further back into that shell. Whatever I did, it was probably the wrong thing, because the impression gained impetus if anything."

Frances Farmer has always been an individualist. During the four years she spent at the University of Washington she was intensely interested in drama, and played the lead in many campus plays. Then, winning an essay contest, she was awarded a trip to Europe. She traveled in Russia, Germany, Poland, France and England.

Life Begins With 40 Mothers For Cantor; Opens at Rialto

By MARGUERITE TAZELAAR.

NEW YORK, July 20.—"For me life begins with 'Forty Little Mothers,'" declared Eddie Cantor, rolling his eyes.

"I mean it in all seriousness," he added. "When people say, 'Don't you feel older now that you are a grandpa?' I reply, 'That doesn't make me any older, though it may make my daughter older.' As a matter of fact, I feel younger today than I did several years ago. I happen to be in better health and I'm doing the kind of work I enjoy. Besides, conditions in this country, at present, should make anybody feel good just because he lives here."

Mr. Cantor, who has entertained his fellow Americans for the past 25 years, in vaudeville, musical-comedy and pictures, completes his 12th film, with "Forty Little Mothers," based on a story, "Monsieur Petiot," by Jean Guilton. It introduces the comedian in his first serious role. And it will open Friday in Atlanta, Ga., at Manager W. T. Murray's Rialto theater.

"I had to laugh up my sleeve when they said, 'Cantor is an actor now,'" he observed. "What pray, have I been for the past quarter of a century—a carpenter, a plasterer, a shoe salesman? No,

I have been acting. If the things I did were light, it is because they were written that way. But, opinion to the contrary, I have my serious moments, like everybody else. I've even made serious speeches before audiences. What difference does it make whether a camera is grinding or not?"

Not that he is playing "Hamlet" or "Pagliacci" in "Forty Little Mothers," he pointed out, but it is the first straight role he has ever had.

"There are moments in it when people sniffle a little and tears drop from their eyes," he confessed. "I never did that before."

The reason he made the picture is that when he and his wife saw it on the screen in French, his wife said she thought here was just the kind of a role he should be playing. After considering the matter, he decided she was right and convinced Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer that it was a good idea to buy the story and produce it in an American version, with him as star.

"If people like me in the part, I will go on with serious roles," he declared. "It depends on the actor."

Cameo To Show 'Virginia City'

"Virginia City" plays at the Camero theater tomorrow and Tuesday. The picture co-stars Errol Flynn and Miriam Hopkins as two people whose conflicting missions take them on a hazardous journey across the desert.

Errol Flynn, as a tough, two-fisted adventurer, is said to have surpassed even his success in "Dodge City," and a new, vivid Miriam Hopkins is revealed in the part of a dancing, fighting spitfire.

said. "If they don't, there's no use in my saying I'll do others, because I am not playing just for the pleasure of the ushers. Frankly, I had a good time doing this picture. In it I appear opposite an eight months' old baby. But that was no new experience to me. I have been rehearsing the part for 25 years."

Mr. Cantor was referring to himself as a father of five daughters, and now as a grandfather.

As to audiences, whether in the legitimate or motion picture theater, he thinks they are pretty much the same.

"There is no such thing as a bad audience or a good audience," he declared. "It depends on the actor."

Laughter in Uncle Sam's Navy

Believing that in these troublesome times the people of Atlanta want laughter, the Capitol theater management has secured for a four-day showing, starting today, "Sailor's Lady," which is said to be one of the finest comedy type of pictures which has been produced so far this year.

The all-star cast of "Sailor's Lady" includes such well known names as Jon Hall, who scored a hit in "Hurricane," Nancy Kelly, Joan Davis, Larry Crabbe, Katharine Alexander, Wally Vernon, Mary Nash and "Skipper," the cutest little sailor you ever saw.

The fun starts from the time the first scene flashes on the screen. After Jon Hall and his sweetheart, Nancy Kelly, obtain their wedding license, Hall discovers that she has adopted a baby. A spinster neighbor who feels Nancy incapable of caring for the baby, brings her to court, which adds extra trouble for the couple. But objections are withdrawn when Nancy and Jon promise to marry in a hurry.

On the way home Jon is picked up by a navy shore patrol for using another sailor's liberty card. Nancy, posing as Jon's wife, pleads with the ship's captain to be lenient with him. The captain in turn promotes Jon and upon the latter's return to shore he and Nancy give a party in honor of the spinster's neighbor to convince her they will make good parents for "Skipper." However, Jon's go-brothers, intent on keeping him in the navy, incite a fight at the party.

Nancy, fearful that she will this time lose her adopted baby "Skipper," smuggles him aboard Jon's ship and leaves him there. The navy with the stowaway aboard the flagship is off for maneuvers. Then the baby scuttles the navy's war games when he is discovered, all for love, of course.

"Sailor's Lady" will be presented through Wednesday, to be followed, starting Thursday, by Zane Grey's great out-of-door action drama "Light of the Western Stars."

Blue Ribbon Awards Won by Starlets

HOLLYWOOD, Cal., July 20.—Jane Wyman and Brenda Marshall are Warner Brothers' "blue ribbon stars of 1940," selected by a jury of 12 studio employees as the young feminine players most likely to succeed this year.

The Misses Wyman and Marshall were the choices of Ernest Haller, cinematographer; Robert Fellows, associate producer; Oren Hanglund, assistant director; Orry Kelly, stylist; Perc Westmore, makeup chief; "Red" Turner, prop man; George Hurrell, portrait artist; Anatole Litvak, director; Harvey Briggs, purchasing agent; Jo Drogmund, wardrobe mistress; Steve Trilling, casting department; and Sadie Freyer, stenographic department head.

As a result of the first annual "blue ribbon" accolade, Miss Wyman's next role will be opposite Eddie Albert in "The Poor Nut."

Miss Marshall, who recently completed her role opposite Errol Flynn in "The Sea Hawk," is the subject of a new story search.

The selections were endorsed by studio production heads. The young ladies will receive now the benefits of an extensive, individualized grooming process calculated to place them in the first rank of Hollywood's stars.

ELATED BEAUTY—Brenda Marshall, the comely Texas brunette, is happy as a lark this summer because she has one of the most coveted roles of the year, that of the "Sea Hawks" girl in the picture of that name, and has been named one of the most likely to succeed this year.

HARDYS MOVE TO RHODES

The Hardy family has once again woven a tale of hilarious comedy and poignant human drama in "Andy Hardy Meets Debutante," held over at the Rhodes theater. The Hardys take a trip to New York, where Lewis Stone, as Judge Hardy, must fight a dramatic battle against the best legal brains in the metropolis or see Carvel orphanage, refuge of the little town's parentless youngsters, be closed for lack of funds.

Meanwhile, Mickey Rooney, as Andy, has enmeshed himself in a situation from which he can see no escape. Infatuated with the pictures of a New York glamour girl, he has boasted to his sweetest, Ann Rutherford, that he knows the debutante. Taken to New York, he must make good the boast or never hear the last of it.

Shadows and Substance

By LEE ROGERS.

Broadway Stars, Cotton Fields and Feudal Lords.

They had killed the fatted chickens, the frying grease was handy and the biscuit dough was setting. Folks down on the Bar M ranch in Thomas county were ready to shower southern hospitality on a "young missey" from Broadway. But Yankee promptness ruined the show.

The Bar M ranch is Latrop Mitchell's home. Lay is a Georgia boy who has done right well on the legitimate stage, including appearances with Katharine Cornell in "The Barretts of Wimpole Street," and others. Being a generous soul, he had invited a friend—June Nash, former Broadway baby star—to share a dull summer theater slack with a rest on the ranch. June has grown up now and in her two-piece swim suit makes you forget rum collars, even on a hot south Georgia day.

June came down by boat. It outran its schedule. She had been told to catch the first train—and did. It happened to be a one-car motor train running between Jacksonville and Gainesville, Fla. Lay had told her to get off in Drifton. She did—with all 20 bags. But only the station master was there to meet her. He told June she could pile her bags there on the two-by-four platform and wait for her friends.

In a broiling Florida sun she waited. And wilted. The station master went home for lunch. She could go in the station, also two-by-four, and get in the shade, he said. June looked inside and decided to take a chance with the sun.

June figured she'd come the wrong way. Then the station master's young son arrived. He was smitten by her blonde beauty and the curve of her hips. Southern gentleman like, he volunteered to drive her to the ranch.

June nearly collapsed when the car drove up. But climbed in—a New York glamor girl in a Model T touring of 1923 vintage. In and out of mud holes, they rode. Two hours of this and June asked if the boy was lost. He was but hadn't been in a hurry to find his way.

They did arrive, but there were no footmen to open the door. June stumbled over and asked an old darkey:

"Where's Mr. Lay?" in her best southern drawl.

"He's done gone to meet a young missey from New York."

"Well, I'm the young missey."

"Lordy, missey, I done thought you wuz coming on the afternoon train."

Lay and the rest of the family arrived later. They'd met the later train.

"Hi, June," he yelled in greeting from the gate. But, June was a "spurned" Scarlett. She turned on her heels and fled into the house. Margaret Mitchell's glorious picture of the south had met its first setback in June's mind.

What! No Sistas?

Next day things were looking up. June and the rest of us had just finished a typical southern dinner at the home of that charming hostess, Mrs. Evelyn Peck, in Thomasville.

The midday dinner over, the party retired to the wide veranda, seeking a cool spot.

June plopped into her chair:

"When's sista time?"

"Sista?" Lay queried. The women folks looked up in alarm.

"Why, my dear," one replied, "we play bridge in the afternoon."

"This isn't at all like the south I expected after 'Gone With the Wind,'" the stage star apologized.

War and Show Profits.

Miss Nash brings word that the Broadway producers and the night club owners in New York are expecting a dull fall and winter. The war being the reason.

"With no one knowing if or when we might get in the war, people aren't going to spend money," Miss Nash quoted them as reasoning.

But Mr. Mitchell came through with the reasoning we like to follow. If there is a war and if anything happens to this country, money and savings won't be worth a Yankee nickel, anyway, so why not spend a little cash on amusements—particularly, he says, the legitimate stage.

In the case of stress, when people are worried, relaxation is a necessity. Poor economy it would be to stay away from amusements, trying to save for what might be called "M" day. If the plays are light and not depressing and if the movies follow this same reasoning and continue to produce comedies which take minds away from serious thoughts, the entertainment world should have no fear of lost profits. We'll grab at anything which gives relief from worries.

Where Do They Go From Here?

Osa Massen will play second feminine lead in "Honeymoon for Three" with Ann Sheridan. . . . Thomas Mitchell, just completing the role of "Driscoll" in John Ford's "The Long Voyage Home," will next make "Before I Die" for Columbia studios. . . . Director Alfred Hitchcock, with "Foreign Correspondent," now ready for distribution, will appear in his own sketch, "The Lodger," over the radio July 29 with Herbert Marshall in a Red Cross benefit. . . . John Wayne and Jack Pennick really suffered broken ribs in a battle with storm waves in "The Long Voyage Home" and, as they still are wearing bandages, will testify all film scenes are not faked.

No Young Roosters.

Surprise was expressed by some motion picture fans when ages of favorite actor-lovers were disclosed last week in British orders instructing actor subjects between 18 and 31 to return to the colors. . . . Favorites Laurence Olivier, Cary Grant, Charles Laughton, Basil Rathbone, David Niven, Ray Milland and Brian Aherne were all too old to be affected. . . . Youngsters affected were dimpled Richard Greene, Louis Hayward and Patric Knowles.

Ann Gillis Grows Up.

Remember little Ann Gillis? She was a red-headed, freckled-faced youngster when she and her mother were here. She was as much an American girl as Twain's Tom Sawyer was the American boy. Now there is much mistaking it, she is an actress. And in "My Love Came Back," a fiery one.

Recently Ann appeared in "Edison, the Man" as the little high school girl interviewing the great inventor. She seems well on her way as an actress. She shows marked ability in "My Love Came Back" and Atlantans will watch the youngster with interest—but they won't recognize her as the girl here two winters ago.

Bob Burns refers to his new picture, Paramount's "Comin' Round the Mountain," as a blitzkrieg. The fight's all over in a season, instead of lasting for generations.

'Eureka!'---1940 Hollywood Goes Greek

EYE STOPPER—Judy Canover, that Unadilla farm gal, steals a movie stunt from Sylvia Sidney's "It Happened One Night," repertoire, with intent to hitchhike to New York, where Republic starred her in "Scatterbrain." Just like all other gals, Judy had been reading the movie pages and looking over those glamour gals. "Isn't my leg as good as Sylvia's?" she asks her pet chicken.

FEET FIRST AND BEAUTY NEXT—Why get housemaid's knees when a clean house is just a mop-up with the feet. If it's a brain with ideas that Hollywood wants, says Judy, "I've got it." Just look at this easy method of house cleaning.

YIP . . . EE, I MADE IT—Judy yells as she does a "cow-jumped-over-the-moon" hop. No more behind the plow for me. Papee has decided to sell the mortgage and make a moving picture actress out of me. So look out, Hollywood, that Georgia gal is going to make good.

SYRACUSE, N. Y., July 20.—Two thousand years ago there was a town in Greece named Syracuse which Shakespeare chose as the scene for a play which he wrote—1,700 years later. The same tale, about twin masters and twin slaves, reached the Broadway stage a year ago amplified by such authorship as a modern adaptation by George Abbott and the music of Rodgers and Hart.

Thursday, in this Syracuse, Hollywood introduced its version of the story in the first movie premiere which the city has enjoyed—or suffered. Citizens sported togas of ancient Greece and drove chariots in a giant parade. Movie stars waved from elevated seats on open cars camouflaged to look like the floats of the Socratic period—if they had any then.

Shakespeare makes his play "Much Ado About Nothing." Broadway calls it "The Boys From Syracuse" and left one line of Shakespeare in it. Universal Pictures used the Broadway title but eliminated this only line of Will's, supplying instead the music of the Broadway show and such stars as Allan Jones, Rosemary Lane, Joe Penner, Martha Raye and Eric Blom.

The picture proved to be a sprightly musical in which the characters used native American colloquialisms albeit in the best Periclean spirit. The film title as it was thrown on the screen was printed in Greek which faded into English. One scholar from Syracuse University who attended the "Boys From Syracuse" preview pointed out a slight error which he felt should be called to the attention of the producers. In the Greek title a modern prefix and an ancient suffix were used at one and the same time. But then it was Shakespeare who said "The play's the thing," and the big idea is that Syracuse has finally had a Hollywood premiere.

Crime Lawyer Pictured At Paramount

Warner Brothers' story of underworld lawyers, "The Man Who Talked Too Much," starring George Brent, Virginia Bruce, Brenda Marshall, Richard Barthelmess and William Lundigan, opens at the Paramount theater Friday.

It is a fast-paced commentary on underworld life and of lawyers who are ensnared by their own unscrupulous activities. The story, adapted for the screen by Walter DeLeon and Earl Baldwin, was directed by Vincent Sherman. It tells of a district attorney, played by Brent, who is disillusioned with his job when he learns that a boy he has convicted is innocent—too late to save him. He resigns and moves to cheap law offices with the support only of a faithful secretary, played by Virginia Bruce.

When the lawyer becomes mouthpiece for an underworld character, played by Richard Barthelmess, Virginia waits patiently until he is jolted back to his real self.

Your Own Horoscope For Today

By ALICE DENTON JENNINGS, Noted Atlanta Chirologist

What Today Means to You If You Were Born Between:

March 21 and April 19 (ARIES)
The prevailing influences throughout the day and until 6:08 p. m. tend towards irritability, contention and dissatisfaction. However, with a little effort these tendencies may be overcome. You will have a tendency to be quick, and also too hasty. People may annoy you over trifles, and you may easily upset them. After 6:08 p. m. favors pleasures, romance, domestic ideas and congeniality.

April 20 and May 20 (TAURUS)
Previous to 11:18 a. m. favors those things that require diplomacy and tact. After 11:18 a. m. and continuing throughout the day, the atmosphere is calmer, and older people, old ideas, and old matters will progress.

May 21 and June 20 (GEMINI)
A combination of influences operating throughout the day and until 11:20 a. m. may cause you to feel either belated or depressed, and therefore bring you interference. A feeling of despondency will not aid you in social contacts or in domestic matters, therefore it will be better to shun anything that suggests quarreling or worry. After 10:20 p. m. favors travel, literary affairs and writings.

June 21 and July 22 (CANCER)

PLANT MADONNA LILY NOW

By W. ELBRIDGE FREEBORN.

MANY lilies grow and grow well here in Atlanta but most of these are planted during the fall and winter. However, there is one that should be planted between now and the first of September. This is the Madonna Lily, and it is a grand and glorious one.

Within the last few years as interest in ornamental gardening has increased by leaps and bounds, the interest in lilies has grown as fast, if not faster, than in general gardening. These lilies have been introduced to a great many people for the first time within the last few years; have been collected from our own country, while others have been collected from Europe and several varieties from far-off Japan. In past years many of the varieties of lilies have been imported from Asia and Europe. Fortunately, we have been learning how to propagate many of these in this country during these several years just passed, so we may expect to find lilies again this year.

One of the favorite early blooming lilies is liliun candidum. It is loved under a number of other such names as annunciation lily, Bourbon lily, June lily and Madonna lily, but it is as beautiful and fragrant under any of these common names as it is under the more dignified name of liliun candidum.

It has so long been seen in our American gardens that many people erroneously consider it a native lily. As a matter of fact, its habitat is southeastern Europe from Corsica to Greece, Turkey, Persia, and as far east as the Caucasus. Formerly most of the bulbs planted were grown in France and of

WHAT TO PLANT IN JULY

LAWNS: Bermuda grass seed may still be planted, or the roots may be transplanted. Roll thoroughly after planting and water thoroughly.

FLOWER SEEDS: There is still time to get flowers from the fast-growing annuals, such as zinnias, marigolds, petunias and ageratum. Perennial flower seeds may be planted now for blossoms next year. These include pansies, hollyhocks, Canterbury bells, Shasta daisy, English daisy, foxglove, oriental poppies, candytuft, etc. These should be started for best results in a cold frame.

VEGETABLE SEEDS: July is the accepted month for rutabagas and fall Irish potatoes: beans, pumpkins, spinach, squash and crowder peas may be planted now. The early planters will begin to put in purple-top turnips, beets, carrots and lettuce. Collard and cabbage plants for fall and winter use may be planted now.

BEDDING PLANTS: These may be planted in July, although it is a little hard to find them this late in the season.

course, there will be no important variations from that country this year. However, this lily has grown so wonderfully well in the southeast that there will probably be available a sufficient quantity for our gardens this fall.

Disease.
Occasionally a sort of blight attacks this lily but it may be controlled by a thorough spraying with Bordeaux.

Drainage.

The most important single cultural direction in the case of lilies is drainage. The best method to pursue is to dig out the bed to a depth of three feet, place in the bottom of this hole at least six inches of stones and clinkers that are at least as large as your fist. On top of this drainage place the topsoil that was taken from the hole and fill the hole back with good rich garden soil. If you are lucky to have some stable manure that is at least three, or better, four years old, incorporate that into the topsoil that is being placed on top of the drainage. Be sure that no manure can touch the bulbs being planted. Be sure that the topsoil used is not too heavy; if it seems fairly heavy add some sand; lilies must have good drainage. This is most important.

Try a few blue cynoglossum around the base of your Madonna lilies. You'll be surprised how colorful this blue and white contrast will be.

The War and Your Garden.

The changes that will necessarily be made in your garden, plus the changes that you may desire to make because of the war, will be legion. It might be well to pause and consider these. In the first place, we probably should assume that the war will last for a long period of time. Even when the war is over, business and shipping will be a long time returning to normalcy.

Gardens, both flower and vegetable, come from all over the world—not only from every continent, but almost from every country. Since the first World War more and more of our flower and vegetable seeds have been produced in our own country.

So it might be well to find from your own source of supply whether the items that you may have mentally selected for planting this fall will be available.

Another thought along the line of war may be worth considering. If the first World War may be taken as a criterion, it will be true that the United States will necessarily and to a great extent feed Europe, not only during the course of the war, but also during the reconstruction period after the war.

When this great demand for foodstuff takes place, plus the fact that many of our young men are being drawn from the ranks of producers into the ranks of our own army or industry supplying it, we may find shortages and high prices.

So we may be faced with the patriotic duty and the added attractive profitable reason for planting vegetables.

Here in the south we are fortunate in having an opportunity to plant a fall garden that can be just as great as one filled with vegetables for fall and winter consumption.

It might be well to review the vegetables that may be planted right now. It is a long list. Rutabagas, Irish potatoes, pumpkins, spinach, squash, crowder peas, blackeye peas, turnips, beets, carrots, tomato plants for a few ripe ones, and many green pickling tomatoes, lettuce, onion sets, string beans and lima beans.

Of these vegetables that may be planted now, a discussion of a few special varieties might be interesting. This is particularly true of the butter beans and string beans that may be planted now, for only the early varieties will have time to fruit before frost. If you like a smooth, stringless, tender bean we heartily recommend tendergreen stringless. This is an all-America selections winner some three years ago and has proved to be a wonderful table variety. Either the Henderson bush lima or Jackson wonder bush lima beans may be planted now. These are both small, very tender, delicious varieties, and we are particularly fond of the Jackson wonder. It is a colored butter bean. It may look pretty on the table but it has a more meaty flavor than the white varieties. Then, too, it is a colored variety and not found in many grocery stores, which is an added reason for planting it in your garden.

There are three varieties in turnips that should be found in every garden. The globe globe, Japanese shogoin and seven-top. Purple top globe is the general utility turnip, makes very good greens, also very good turnips. Japanese shogoin, due to the type of leaf growth, is louse-resistant and therefore has great advantages when you are trying to grow early greens. Seven-top is a standard winter variety, being very hardy. The greens are not their best until after frost.

WHAT TO DO IN JULY

SPRAYING: For aphids on nasturtiums and roses use nicotine sulphate of about 40 per cent strength. Insects that chew may be controlled by the use of arsenical sprays, such as calcium arsenate, paris green, arsenic of lead, etc. Almost all of the common insects may be killed by the use of a spray with a pyrethrum or rotenone. For mildew and blight on roses use Massey Dust, on other plants use Dord Mixture. Bean beetles are having a glorious time now. A mixture of calcium arsenate, sulphur and lime will make a good dust for their control. The use of nonpoisonous rotenone sulphur is increasing each year.

FERTILIZERS: For flowers, such as gladioli and dahlias that are about to bloom, give a good heavy side-dressing of 4-12-4. This should be repeated on dahlias every two weeks with heavy watering.

LAWNS: Mow the lawn more often than it seems necessary. For best results make a light top-dressing of a well-balanced fertilizer about once every three weeks, followed by a good thorough soaking. Fill the bare spots with seed.

PRUNING: Take out all of the dead wood in the shrubbery, fruit trees, roses and other plants.

GEORGIA PEAT MOSS

IMPROVES GROWING ENVIRONMENT

Peat moss, with its billions of tiny sponge-like cells, is the perfect soil conditioner for all types of soils. It breaks up heavy clay soils and gives body to light, sandy soils—provides a never-failing source of humus, increases available fertility, aerates the soil and prevents hardening.

WHEN a scrivener sits down to the happy task of chronicling the life, times, legends, gags and exploits of the Great Profile we suggest he not overlook this fragment of the wondrous tale that is Barrymore's. On one of his frequent road tours the actor was stricken by a brief breakdown and his entourage hastily summoned the doctor. Every one waited anxiously outside the Barrymore hotel room until the medico came out and then they rushed up to him to ask how the patient was faring. "He's pretty bad," replied the doctor gravely. "Depressed. He thinks there are four Shuberts!"

When the conversational hubbub at the Beachcomber reached the subject of the prize ring, Monte Proser told the gem which has to do with the days when prizefighters used to double in brass by acting in road shows. Peter Jackson, the Negro slugger with the famous physique, was emoting in "Uncle Tom's Cabin," and at one performance the house manager caught a critic fleeing the theater after the first act. "What," asked the manager, "do you think of Jackson's performance?" "Anatomically perfect—Uncle Tomically it stinks!" was the reply.

Charlie Adler, of the Forty-eighth Street Tavern, is getting laughs with the one about the top-hatted gent who was halted one night by a dangerous looking citizen who mumbled: "Mister, could you let me have $20 for a cup of coffee? I ain't had nothing this week except a doughnut and this loaded revolver!"

These are our strength, these youngsters of ours. Our Soap Box Derby racers, our model plane builders and fliers, our sturdy, independent dreamers of young dreams that tomorrow will be transformed into miracles of art, architecture, science. Sid Snow, zoo keeper at Alameda, Cal., is having a friendly visit with the family of Erra, a cougar. Kitten Nevada, in the foreground, has her eye on that hat, though.

Oh! Oh! Snow was right. Erra li joins her sister in the fine sport, while Mama tries to act nonchalantly despite the embarrassing behavior of her young 'uns.

Skiing? Yes. Snow? No. Sand skiing is all the rage now near Quebec, and here is a novice heading for a fall down the steep slopes.

Bathing suits and skis are quite the rage. This young lady finds the combination of warm sun and "winter" sport attractive.

They fall on the sand just as easily as on snow—but the sand is harder and the tumble not quite as pleasant.

Nevada isn't going to give up her plaything very easily, but Snow gingerly tries to snatch it away without too much hullabaloo. Mama is still showing unconcern.

But enough is enough. After all, it was a friendly visit and children should be expected to behave, even though they are cougars. Besides, Snow does the feeding.

Mama is very, very sorry and nuzzles Snow to apologize for the destruction of the hat. Snow didn't have any choice but to accept the apology.

CITY OF SILVER

Alfonzo Ruiz Mondragon, skilled artisan, is shown at his work table. He uses a blow torch to make rings, bracelets and other jewelry. He can make a silver ring in a day and a half; two days or more are required to hammer a silver bracelet or similar article.

Rare examples of earlier Spanish-Mexican art are to be found in the carvings on the facade of the magnificent Taxco church, shown here. It cost 9,000,000 pesos.

Typical street scene in Taxco, showing the rock-lined narrow streets worn to a glassy surface by the constant beat of burros' hoofs and human feet upon the little rocks. Burros are used for almost all load-carrying activities.

Interior of one of the smelting rooms where some 150 men are engaged in making rings, jewelry and trinkets from native silver. The furnace at left is hand operated, just as it was four centuries ago. The artisan at the right is showing an example of his handiwork—a silver pitcher.

Down from the mines come a group of silver-burdened burros en route to the smelting plant.

An unending line of donkeys moves through the streets of Taxco carrying silver ore to the smelting plants. Nearly four centuries ago, local law prescribed that streets should never be paved in other than original manner, hence roughly cobbled pavements are worn thin and slippery by years of service.

Throughout the world lives the legend of the town that silver built. It is Taxco, about 100 miles south of Mexico City, and one of the most famous "little" communities in all the Americas. Known to American artists and sculptors for many years, it has long been a refuge for those of creative instinct for here they may work without the usual disturbances experienced by a popular "art colony." More substantial than its source of inspiration, however, are the vast silver mines which for many centuries have yielded much of the material wealth of the nation. Here it was that Cortes, in search of silver bounty for his Spanish monarch, found it in such great quantities that he immediately established a colony here to operate the deposits in 1522. But it was a Frenchman, Joseph le Borde, who actually began large scale silver mining here in 1717, and it was under his inspiring leadership that Taxco became known as the chief mining town in all Mexico.

Silver ore is taken from rocks, broken by hand at the mines near Taxco. Groups of natives work at the mine, bring out the rocks containing the ore. These are hauled to the smelting plants where, following the old routine, the silver is extracted then converted into jewelry, trinkets and other articles.

Patch Work Barn is a rustic summer theater built from the old carriage barn on the plantation of Mr. and Mrs. Wayne P. Sewell, the Hettie Jane Dunaway Gardens, near Newnan, Georgia. Here Edwin Strawbridge, internationally famous dancer, and Miss Virginia Miller, ballerina, are training students of the dance, who come from as far away as Vienna, Austria. TOWED SWIFTLY BY HIS CAPTOR, HIS BODY BUMPED AGAINST THE WALLS OF A NARROW WATER-FILLED TUNNEL.

MEANWHILE, IN A STRANGE CAVERN A GROUP OF PRIESTS STOOD WATCHING A PLACID POOL.

SUDDENLY THE SURFACE WAS BROKEN BY THE HEAD OF A MAN, THEN THE BODY OF HIS BURDEN—TARZAN.

EAGER HANDS REACHED OUT AND PULLED THEM UP.

TARZAN'S CAPTOR DREW GREAT BREATHS INTO HIS HUGE CHEST, THEN HE SAID: -----

"MOLOCAR'S COMMAND IS DONE." AS HE SPOKE HE POINTED TO THE MOTIONLESS BODY OF THE JUNGLE LORD.

"A DANGEROUS FELLOW," NODDED ONE OF THE PRIESTS, "IT IS WELL THAT HE IS DEAD."

A GAY SHORT STORY BY RICHARD POWELL

THE SABOTEUR AT WORK

Second in a series of important articles about the activities of the Fifth Column in America

by J. EDGAR HOOVER

Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation

THE saboteur is one of the most potentially dangerous members of the fifth column now working inside America. Whether he seeks to destroy our machinery, to burn our materials, to block the orderly functions of our government in time of emergency, to poison our food or water supplies — or whether he merely specializes in the plain bungling of work — he is a serious menace to our internal security.

When it is skillfully performed, by even small groups of foreign agents, sabotage is often more disastrous than results secured by a regiment of soldiers in time of war. The explosion on Black Tom Island, New Jersey, in 1916, is proof of this. Three men were killed and many others were injured in that blast. Thirty-three carloads and ten barges of ammunition, valued at over $20,000,000, were destroyed. The explosion shook the entire area of metropolitan New York, causing a million-dollar loss in shattered glass in Manhattan alone.

The horrors of well-executed sabotage become obvious when we consider a city in darkness, its water supply polluted or its transportation system wrecked. Last summer the nation was shocked by news of the wreckage of a crack streamliner in the West. Frequent similar disasters could be expected once the experienced saboteur moved into action.

Sabotage has none of the romance often associated with espionage. It is a grim, sordid thing. Waste and horror follow in its wake. It is carried on by the espionage agent or the traitorous individual who works with him. The spy is very often the advance agent of the saboteur, who, with torch and bomb and destructive weapons, may spread desolation throughout the country, cripple the nation's industrial plants, make it difficult to feed and supply troops, destroy the morale of the civil population and undermine national-defense programs.

The saboteur invariably attacks the source of supply. He strikes at the fountainhead of our power. It is not practical, of course, to draw a definite line of demarcation between the efforts of spies seeking to discover secrets of our military and naval defense and offense, and that part of the army of spies and associated saboteurs that strikes at our industries.

Aims at Supplies

OBVIOUSLY, our military and naval secrets would be of little avail to us if supplies and materials could not be promptly transmitted to our military and naval forces. An army in the field, possessing the most modern, effective arms, is useless without an ample supply of ammunition. The saboteur strikes at this flow of ammunition. Our Army and Navy cannot defend us unless they are fed. They cannot engage the enemy unless the supply of steel from our steel plants is sufficient to provide the implements of defense. It is the saboteur's goal to hamper the manufacture and delivery of these supplies.

The saboteur operates in as many ways as there are methods of disabling plants, damaging material and supplies, crippling power and interfering with the manufacture of every type of product in a modern, industrial community.

Fire is a favorite weapon of this enemy agent. The damage done by disastrous fires in industrial plants is difficult to estimate. The saboteur in his work seeks to veil his activities so that fires and explosions will appear to be accidental. This is fundamental. He endeavors in every possible manner to make these disasters appear to have been caused by human frailty on the part of plant employees or by defects in the operation of machinery.

His methods have vastly improved with the advance of science. Explosions and fires, the favorite weapons of these agents, may be arranged so that the saboteur may be many miles away from the scene when the disaster occurs. For instance, a small vial may be placed in a supply of coal destined for the engines of a transport or a merchant vessel carrying goods of vital value to our armed forces. Chemicals inside the vial slowly eat their way through the container. This process can be timed so that the vessel will be miles

U. S. Army Air Corps

We need first-class workmen who are also first-class Americans—like these at sea before the chemicals cause the consequent fire.

Foreign agents practice similar schemes in industrial plants. And, when the time is ripe, they strike at power lines, public utilities, boilerhouses, engine rooms and railroad bridges. During the months and years preceding a war, they plan, chart, sketch and devise the specific methods to be employed at the appointed hour. They do everything that a skillful general does who knows that he must fight a battle against superior forces at some future time.

The saboteur does not always arrive from an enemy country at the outbreak of war or shortly before war is declared. For years, even for decades, a staff of agents may be working in key industrial plants in various countries. By reason of their long employment these agents will be almost completely immune from suspicion, thus making it extremely difficult to detect their activities.

To combat these far-flung sabotage activities, the FBI has instituted surveys of hundreds of industrial plants that have contracts with the Army and Navy to supply material for national defense. Specially trained Special Agents carefully consider every possible vulnerable point in these plants and then devise means by which they can be protected. Suggestions are made to plant executives and employees. I have never encountered a finer spirit of patriotism than is being exhibited by these industrial workers, who are helping in every way they can to make our national defense secure.

The necessity for insuring continued production of the commodities needed in our national preparedness cannot be overestimated. Let me illustrate the ways in which sabotage threatens this production, and the steps that can be taken defensively to meet these attacks. The objective of a saboteur is to break the continuity of the supply of necessary emergency or war materials. The expert saboteur discerns, usually through employment in a key plant, the particular buildings or the exact machinery vitally necessary to the continuance of production. Then he tries to halt or to slow down that production.

The following incidents that have actually occurred in some of our industrial plants show how the saboteur works, and emphasize the threat he holds for us:

Nails have been driven through cables causing short circuits; tools have been placed on ledges over generators so that vibration would cause them to fall into spinning gears; pieces of bent wire have been placed over the terminals of a switchboard; metal rods have been placed in generators; wiring has been changed so that meters and gauges did not accurately reflect the working condition of certain machinery; bricks have been lodged in troughs which carried off molten steel, thus causing an overflow.

To meet these threats experienced FBI Special Agents are sent to survey plants and to give defensive suggestions. These Special Agents are as well equipped, perhaps better qualified than the saboteur, to discern these vulnerable points of possible attack. They often can tell at a glance the points that are not sufficiently protected. They may recommend additional guards, or additional floodlights. They may recommend twenty-four-hour guard service where none exists.

Identity Badges

THEY may suggest that steps be taken to see that any visitors entering the plant are carefully scrutinized upon entry, their identity fully established; that they are required to wear distinctively marked badges while in the plant; that the time of their entry be registered; that they be escorted to the plant official with whom they claim to have business; that they be escorted to the gate upon exit, and that the time of their exit be duly registered and the badge taken from them.

They will suggest that no individual employees in positions of trust — and particularly no employees who are members of the police forces of these plants — should be continued in such employment unless their personal histories have been thoroughly investigated to determine their reliability and their immunity to enemy solicitation or corruption.

Since the saboteur seeks to make his acts appear to be accidents, we emphasize that no fires of mysterious origin should go uninvestigated. And because saboteurs are always seeking to learn how they can do the most damage, workers in positions of trust are urged to show their patriotism by refusing to disclose — to anyone — the confidential nature of their duties.

Fortunately, sabotage has been circumvented to a great extent during the present emergency, yet it cannot be denied that several serious plots have been averted only by the prompt action that has been taken.

There was the case of the skilled employee in an airplane factory who stole secret plans of a new bomber from the plant. Fortunately, we got them back and sent the thief to prison. And here is another case of a different type that occurred recently. One day when a workman returned from lunch he found emery dust in the mechanism upon which he was working. This mechanism was designed to steer a highly precise implement of war — and, if it were faulty, it would have resulted in a costly loss. Yet one employee who worked on the mechanism admitted that he had put an abrasive on the gears because he had a grudge against a fellow workman who worked too fast. The case is now pending trial.

The country's industries must continue operating at full force if our internal defense is to be maintained on a proper basis. Adequate defense of our industries against the saboteurs of the fifth column will help to spell certain national security.

WORKING PRESS

The new Managing Editor had a creed. It was that cretonne curtains and girl reporters just didn't belong in any newspaper office. But Holly Brown, girl reporter, had other ideas . . . and applied them fast

by Richard Powell

Illustrated by O. F. Schmidt

A Short Story Complete in This Issue

HOLLY BROWN came into the city room of the Philadelphia Evening Express with a Spring-cleaning bounce to her step. During her two weeks' vacation the room had taken on a dreadful masculine untidiness. It needed a woman's touch. She tingled with pleased horror, like a wife returning from a trip and finding dishes piled in the sink.

Typewriter ribbons had been pounded into black lace. Rewrite men were dropping paper on the floor instead of into wastebaskets. There were new cigarette scars on the desk she shared with one of the other general assignment reporters. As for Andy Struthers, the City Editor —

She marched to his desk and said accusingly: "Andy, your face is yellow. You've been grabbing a coke and a sandwich at your desk instead of taking a proper lunch hour."

"Hiyuh, Holly. Good vacation? Yeah, I've been skipping lunch hour. But we have a new Managing Editor and —"

"So I heard. McCready Hale. The man who wrote 'Spot News.' That's no reason for not taking care of yourself. And now that I'm back —" She paused. Andy was looking at her very queerly. "You are glad I'm back, aren't you?"

His fingers hammered an invisible typewriter. After a moment he asked, "Ever thought of getting married?"

"No. Why?"

"Just asking. Girl like you ought to have a lot of guys forming a line to the right. Some dames, now, they don't look good unless you print their picture with 120 screen on smooth paper. But a kid like you, bright hair and nice clean features, comes out swell in half-tone with our lousy 60 screen. I often thought, if the ship-news boys would only get more girls like you posing on the rail, they'd —"

She laughed. "You sound as if you're getting ready either to marry me or fire me."

"Neither, Holly. Have you read Hale's book?"

"No."

He brought out a copy of "Spot News," found a marked passage and read: "Women reporters and cretonne curtains have no place in a city room. The working press must be hard-boiled and sometimes unscrupulous — two qualities that women are more likely to exhibit in married life than in business."

"Andy, he's wrong! I don't mean me, I'm no good, but Kate Johns is one of the best police reporters in the city."

He said crisply, "Fired."

"And — and Mary Anne Bowman —"

"Fired."

"Without a chance to show him what they can do?"

"He calls it a chance. He brought his pet cobra over from New York with him. A guy named Bill Reardon. He sent Kate and Mary Anne out on test assignments against Reardon. This guy is on to every dirty trick invented since Gutenberg started cutting type, and —"

"And I'm next?"

He nodded miserably. "He left word to send you in."

She walked into the Managing Editor's office, feeling as weak as the singed kitten she had brought back once from covering a fire. Mr. Hale was thin and his face was tarnished like old silver. She diagnosed him immediately as a case of too little home cooking. She could hardly resist asking him home for dinner.

Across the room was a leather chair holding a tangle of arms and legs. She tried to sort out the tangle, in her imagination, and got a young man so big that there must be some mistake. He had black hair and a scowl.

"I'm Holly Brown," she said, running a finger over the desk. It needed dusting.

HALE looked up. "Oh, yes. The young man across the room is Mr. William Reardon. Why don't you get up, Mr. Reardon?"

"Why should I?" Bill growled. "I'm not ready to leave."

"I raised him from a cub," Hale shrugged. "But now that he's fully grown I may have to give him to the Zoo."

"Why should I kid the girl by acting polite? She knows I'm your hatchet man. Why don't you fire her now?"

"He has no sporting sense," Hale explained. "No — what are you doing, Miss Brown?"

She crumpled her handkerchief. "Your desk was so dusty that —"

"Your job is to collect news, not dust. You may have heard that I don't believe there is a place for women among the working press. I'm going to let you try to prove me wrong. Here's an assignment for you and Mr.

Reardon. Gloria Townsend, twenty, of Jasonville, crashed Hollywood a year ago and has been featured in a couple of B pictures. She visits the home town today and will get a civic welcome."

Bill snapped his pencil point and grumbled, "Just a second."

Holly opened her purse. "Here's an extra one." He glared at her and pulled another pencil from his pocket. She sighed. He was the first reporter she had ever met who carried a spare.

Hale chuckled, "They told me you were a terribly helpful girl, Miss Brown. But I'm afraid Mr. Reardon isn't in need of your talents. He can cook and —"

"Lay off," Bill growled.

"— sew and darn stockings and wash clothes. He's independent of women."

She looked pityingly at the black-haired giant. He must be very unhappy having to do all those things for himself. She wished he would growl again. His voice tingled through her like the rumble of trolley wheels in a tunnel.

Hale continued: "You and Mr. Reardon will cover this story independently. Each will phone to a different rewrite man: I will compare the stories."

"Then he'll fire you," Bill snapped.

Hale ignored him. "This is a trivial assignment, Miss Brown. Probably there won't even be any other city reporters present. But if you cover it properly, your job is safe. The Townsend girl arrives in Jasonville by train at 10:30 this morning. That's all."

SHE turned toward the door. There was a noise behind her like a football team going downfield at the kickoff, and Bill charged out ahead of her. She collected her hat and coat, paused to lend the slot man on the copy desk her bottle of aspirin, and then went out to her car.

Jasonville was thirty miles from Philadelphia. By 10:15 she had covered twenty-five miles, and calculated that she would arrive just in time. She twisted her coupé around a curve and saw a boy thumbing toward Jasonville. She stamped on the brake pedal.

"Gee, thanks," he said, climbing in. "Didn't think I'd ever get a lift. Only car going by in the last ten minutes wouldn't stop. Fellow in a yellow roadster. He nearly run me down."

"Was he young? Black hair?"

"Uh-huh. You know him?"

"We're reporters. We're covering Gloria Townsend's visit."

"I'm going in town to see her too. She taught school a year. They give us a holiday. There won't be anything open in Jasonville but the First National Bank and the post-office. Jimmy's father was going to take a bunch of us in but his car broke down. Do you think maybe we could stop by for him?"

"I'm afraid I haven't time."

"Jimmy'll feel awful bad not making it." She glanced at his sad eyes, and was lost. "We-ell, but just this one stop."

It was astonishing how many small boys a coupé would hold, she thought. There seemed to be four inside with her and as many more on the running board. They were Jimmy and Elmo and Bob and Shorty and some others she couldn't remember. It was 10:40, she was still four miles from Jasonville and she had to drive slowly.

"She's a reporter," her first passenger announced. Two heads poked in the window.

"Like in the movies?"

"There's another reporter ahead of her. They're trying to beat each other."

"Not exactly," Holly said. "You see we're both from —" A half-dozen voices protested. They assured her that in the movies all reporters spent their time beating each other. They spent the rest of the trip telling her how it was done.

As she had expected, the Jasonville railroad station was nearly deserted. The baggage master said that the Townsend girl had been taken on a parade that would last, maybe, a half-hour. Then everybody was going to a reception at Borough Hall.

Her passengers scattered to hunt the parade while she tried to pick up more details. She was worried. Getting to an assignment late wouldn't have mattered if other city papers had been covering the story. Rival reporters were always helping her, and friends popping up unexpectedly with news. But she didn't have any friends here.

She drove along the main street, looking for a pay telephone sign. All the stores were closed, and the guard at the bank told her that the only pay phones open were in Borough Hall, across the street. She found the booths. On one hung a sign: Out of Order. The other bulged with Bill Reardon.

She hoped he would hurry. She had only ten minutes to make the postscript lift with her few bits of news. Bill had an alarming stack of notes and talked endlessly. By the time he hung up, the edition deadline had passed.

"Too bad you had to wait," he said, "but I picked up a lot of stuff. Where've you been the last half-hour?" He listened to her explanation about giving the boys a lift. "You're wasted as a reporter," he snorted. "You ought to get a job as a relief expedition."

She entered the booth, called the Express.

Her rewrite man grumbled, "You better get on your toes, kid. This Reardon sent in nearly a column. He covers a story like poison gas. Dan wanted to hold up his stuff so he'd miss the edition, but the louse dictated the story and made Dan send it up in takes."

"I'm glad he did! I don't want to beat him unfairly."

"Anything you say, Holly. What've you got?" He took a few notes and then shouted, "You haven't got anything! It's lucky that Dan slipped me a carbon of Reardon's yarn. I'll rewrite it."

"You'll do nothing of the sort. I'll get my own story."

She hung up and decided to find the parade. Outside the Hall, Bill was talking to an elderly man. Bill was saying, "Sorry. Can't wait. Got to cover this parade."

"But I've got a big story for you!" the man said. "You'll want to put my name right up in the headline and —"

"Try her," Bill grunted, pointing at Holly and walking away.

Holly saw that the man had a silver badge, polished as brightly as his blue serge trousers. The badge announced: Chief of Police, and the shiny trousers added that he wasn't a very successful one. The few words she had overheard told her everything. She was forever meeting people like the Chief of Police. They yearned for publicity. They were sort of pathetic and sometimes she managed to get little stories in the paper for them. But this time she couldn't waste a moment.

He asked, "You a city reporter?"

"Yes, but I have to hurry —"

"Now don't run away like all of them. I been Chief of Police here going on twenty-five years and the city papers never writ me up. Of course nothing ever happens here."

"Not — not anything?"

"Nope. But just wait. In twenty minutes all the papers will be after me. They'll all want to know how John A. Jepson — don't forget the A. — captured them three armed criminals. And it's going to happen right where I'm standing!"

"Really," she gasped, "I —"

"I know," he muttered. "You don't believe me. Even the county detectives and state police don't believe me any more when I tip them off to something big. But this time — come in my office and let me tell you about it." He led the way into Borough Hall, took a seat where he could watch the street through a window, and said, "To begin with, we got to go back to 1917."

"That far?"

"We-ell, make it 1922. That was the time I heard the Edwards boy boasting to another young fellow that he was going to get a couple thousand dollars and run away. I knew the only place he could get it was from his old man's safe at night. You know, I was sure that crime was going to happen, but I sat beside that safe a month and nothing happened. The boy settled down right after that and started taking an interest in his job, so I knew there wasn't much hope of getting a big crime."

He droned on. There was the time Luke Jewett threatened to shoot his wife. Mr. Jepson went in the Jewett kitchen and said he'd wait until it happened, but Luke kinda changed his mind and went off with another woman. Mrs. Jewett married again and is getting along nicely.

"So you see, I don't get any breaks no matter how much I'm on the job. But this time I'm not taking any chances. I'm staying right here out of sight, and I got two men with rifles across the street on the second floor. Now you take down their names."

She sighed. Nearly twenty minutes had passed. She could hear the music of the Jasonville Volunteer Fire Company Band coming nearer. The parade was almost over, anyway. She wrote down the names.

"You forgot to tell me what this crime is going to be," she hinted.

"Oh, yes. Kidnapping."

"But Mr. Jepson, who —"

"Gloria Townsend, that's who. They're going to snatch her right off the steps of Borough Hall."

Holly nearly wept. She had hoped to get at least a little story. She didn't know what the current ransom quotations might be for a girl who had been featured in a couple of B pictures, but twenty dollars seemed high.

"They couldn't kidnap her in the middle of a parade," she said.

"It's the only way they could! She's in the leading car. When she gets out on the steps here, she's nearly alone for a minute with everyone else jammed behind her car. They could do it easy."

"Who do you mean, they?"

"This part may take a little believing," he admitted. "Yesterday a strange young fellow was around town asking all about the parade and Gloria and the stores being closed. I kinda watched him and he went in the post office. He read the Wanted notices. Then he saw me and hurried out and hanged if I didn't find one of the Wanted notices gone. Now why would he take that if it wasn't so people wouldn't recognize him?"

"Where do the three criminals come in?"

"That Wanted notice. All I can remember about it is there were three fellows listed on it. I got a man checking up on — look!"

A black sedan was parking at the opposite curb. Two men, hat brims pulled down, got out and lounged against a fender. A third stayed behind the wheel.

Mr. Jepson's revolver got stuck in the torn lining of his hip pocket. He wrestled with it, pleading, "Come out, now, hang it."

Suddenly Holly was wildly excited. "Are you going to arrest them now?" she gasped.

"Can't. Might be the wrong fellows — Ah, there she comes," as the revolver pulled free.

THE Volunteer Fire Company Band swung into sight and its ranks separated to let a shiny car pull up to the Borough Hall steps. The two loungers crossed the street and waited for the Townsend girl to get out. One held his hand in a coat pocket. Mr. Jepson's revolver sat up in his hand and came to a steady, hunting-dog point. Across the street sunlight flickered on two rifle barrels in an open window.

"Miss Townsend," one of the strangers called.

The girl turned. The young man's hand came from his pocket, clutching a notebook and he asked, "How about an autograph?" She laughed and signed the notebook for him and a scrap of paper for the other youth. Then the two movie fans watched admiringly as Gloria Townsend swept into Borough Hall.

Mr. Jepson sneaked his revolver back into the pocket. "I kept you from covering your story," he muttered.

Holly smiled. "All right, this was a mistake. But all these years you've been preventing crime by being on the job. Too much on the job, to do your reputation any good. That's a story. And I'm going to get it in."

"Honest?" he said, blinking.

"Honest." She went into the hallway and found Bill entering the booth. She called, "You should have talked to Mr. Jepson. He's the nicest —"

"Have you been listening to that muzzle-loader all this time?"

"I got a story from him."

"About Gloria Townsend?"

"Well, no — the way things turned out."

He gave a shrug that jarred his phone booth. Then he reached out to the door of the other booth and removed the Out of Order

"Why kid the girl by acting polite?" he said. "She knows I'm your hatchet man. Why don't you fire her now?"

THE FURTHER ADVENTURES OF Jiminy Cricket

WHEN Zeppo's circus started up, it made a real sensation. The fleas felt fit; they'd done their bit, and got a grand vacation — a chance to sting and have a fling, express their natural feeling. So when they took the ring again, the crowd just hit the ceiling! With clap and yell, they called it swell — and Jiminy, their trainer, saw very well he'd rung the bell as master entertainer.

OLD Soldier Zeppo, full of pep, just sat and sorted money. At last the future looked like fun, and growing old was sunny. He planned to paint Marina's cheeks with vitamins and cream, and buy his mice the kind of cheese they'd nibbled in a dream. While he — the only man alive who thanked his stars for fleas — would pile his hoard upon the board, and live a life of ease.

MOMENTS come when mice and men and crickets, ere they part, get funny feelings in the throat and feel their eyelids smart. "G'by, old pal," sighed Gus the mouse. "Don't catch crick-in-the-neck." "Ya hunk of cheese," sniffed Jiminy, "I'm strong for you, by heck!" They smiled and joked, but each one choked and knew the other's grief, that good old pals must say farewell in partings all too brief.

QUEER DUCKS, AREN'T WE?

GEORGE BERNARD SHAW appeared at his own wedding on crutches and wearing a ragged jacket. The young author was recovering from a long illness at the time, and with his shabby clothes and crutches, he looked like anything but a bridegroom. At least the minister thought so, for he started to marry Shaw's bride to the best-looking man in the crowd — one of the witnesses. . .

Henry Ward Beecher, American orator and lecturer, helped his bride-to-be make their wedding cake. Henry picked over and stoned the raisins, and beat the eggs. . .

Thomas Carlyle wanted to take his brother John along with him on his honeymoon, but the bride said, "No!" And Bismarck had the idea that it would be nice to take a large party of friends along when he and his wife went on their wedding trip, but his wife thought otherwise. . .

Irvin S. Cobb wasn't conspicuously well off when he married. He admits that when he repeated the words: "With all my worldly goods I thee endow," he could hardly keep from laughing. "All my worldly goods, as nearly as I could recall at the moment," says

Mr. Cobb, "consisted of clothes, a set of Redpath's 'History of the World,' and a collection of postage stamps." . . .

A pretty young widow — Mrs. Bathurst Skelton by name — had so many suitors the young men drew straws to decide who should propose to her first. It turned out that a young fellow named Thomas Jefferson won the draw, and the young widow, as smart as she was pretty, accepted him at once. . .

Franklin D. Roosevelt, twice winner of the Punctuality Prize at Groton, kept his bride waiting at the altar when he failed to hear the cue that should have brought him to her side!

OUR Hero's spirits might be low, but not his resolution. He had his wealth of happy health, a cheerful constitution. And when a knight has fought for right, there just is no denying, he can't turn back and change his track — he has to keep on trying. ## A Short Story Complete on This Page

IN THE morning the fog came rolling off the Thames, so that twilight came at noon, and by sundown the traffic was creeping and the bus drivers were thankful for the white markers along the curbs. It was a night of which people would speak, thus: "Fog! Why I remember back in '40 —"

Under the circumstances, a blackout seemed hardly necessary, and yet that night when the enemy came riding his radio beam in from the east, there rose the shrill dirge of the sirens, and in her room Eleanor felt again the thrill she knew only when the city hid in the dark, as a small boy buries his head under the pillow in a thunderstorm.

She felt for and found her coat in the closet, slipped it on, and hurried down the stairs. At the foot of the steps she bumped into Mother Marlin, and stumbled, and Mother Marlin, the landlady, caught her and said: "Are you going out again, Eleanor? Why do you always go out in these blackouts? Bad enough in here, waiting for goodness knows what, without wandering around out there."

"Oh, I'll be all right."

"I wish you wouldn't go. It's terribly dangerous. You might meet — who knows —"

"Why, you might meet the nicest people in a blackout," Eleanor said. "It's an adventure, a lovely adventure — out there in the night."

"Do be careful, dear!"

"I will," Eleanor promised, and then her feet felt the hard, grating stone of the sidewalk, and she breathed deep and felt the fog wet and cool upon her face, and she advanced into the London night.

She hesitated, after a few yards, and stretched for the wall of the building line. Her swift, slender fingers recognized the conformity of the brick, and she knew exactly how many steps she had progressed from her door, and how many more she'd take before she reached the corner, for she had always lived in the neighborhood.

At the corner she stopped and listened carefully.

There were no more traffic noises, but she imagined that far above she heard a plane's engine singing high.

Then from down the street she heard a man's hesitant step, and the sound told her he was faltering her way as if the broad walk were an unexplored cave riddled with pitfalls. When he was quite close she heard a soft thud.

"I beg your pardon," the man said. There was no answer, and no sound for a moment; then he blurted, "Damn! Sandbags!"

Eleanor laughed. She knew it was a bit cruel to laugh at a stranger stumbling into sandbags, but the laugh just slipped out.

"I say," the man called. "Hello there?" He shuffled forward. "There is someone, isn't there?"

"Oh, yes," Eleanor said. "Having trouble?"

"TROUBLE!" He chuckled, pleasantly, from the depths of his chest. "Trouble! I don't know what street I'm on! I was lost even before the blackout. Fog. Now — well, you can see for yourself."

"No, I can't see, any more than you can," Eleanor said. She knew from his voice he was a young man. Not Oxford, but a university voice nevertheless. She felt she knew this voice, but then she realized it was not the voice that was familiar, but the scene and the meeting, for this was the way she had always dreamed it would be.

"Can you tell me what street I'm on?" he asked.

"Bradley Lane."

"Pretty far off; horrible navigator," he said. "Thought I was on Queen's Road."

"It's three squares over. I'll lead you to it, if you'd like."

"Awfully good of you."

She heard his shoes shift uncertainly. "Stay where you are," she ordered, "and I'll come over to you." She walked to his side, and found his sleeve with her hand. Tweed. Soft, and of good texture. She guessed that he was rather stockily built, and just a bit taller than herself.

"This way," she said, and piloted him across the sidewalk, carefully measuring and counting the steps. At the corner she halted him, and said, "Curb!"

ROMANCE IN THE NIGHT

A poignant short-short story of two who met in a London blackout... and of what they never saw

by Pat Frank

Illustrated by Warren Baumgartner

"You must have eyes like a cat's," he said as they crossed.

"Well, not exactly." Nine more steps now, and they'd reach the other side. "Step up," she commanded.

"This is marvelous," he said. "Great thing for a blackout. Beautiful girl to guide you home. Ought to take it up with the government."

"I'm not beautiful," Eleanor told him soberly, but she realized her heart was racing, for she had always known this was what he would say.

"I think you're beautiful. I can't see you, but I think I know what you look like. I should say your hair is fair, and you wear it long so that it falls like a golden mantle over your shoulders —"

"Poet?" she suggested.

"No, chemist. And you have blue eyes, and you're fairly tall — I can tell that, all right."

"I am rather tall," she admitted. She hadn't guessed he would be a chemist.

They safely crossed another intersection and reached a third, and this was as far as Eleanor ever went.

"Well," she said, "here we are now, on Queen's Road."

"You can't lead me any further?" he asked, and took her hand. It seemed completely natural that he should do so.

"No, I'm sorry, I can't," she said. This was going to be the hard part. This was the part that wasn't quite clear, but always in her dream she skipped from here to the next time she met him.

"Oh, now, Miss See-In-The-Dark, you aren't going to just drop me, are you? You can't just come out of the night, and then fall back in again. Why, I'd wonder about you all the rest of my life. Won't allow it."

"I'm afraid!" she said.

He spoke earnestly: "You really shouldn't be afraid — not of me. My name is Robert Conway, and my friends think I'm quite respectable, and I'm unmarried, and I do desperately want to know you. Let's stop here until the 'all clear' sounds, and then we can look at each other. If you don't like my looks we'll say goodbye, and if you do, let's have a cocktail together, or tea."

"No!" she cried. "No, I couldn't possibly."

Now she was supposed to tell him what was wrong, and he was supposed to say it didn't matter, but that wasn't the manner in which it was working out, because far away she heard the first "all clear" whistle, and she knew that in a few minutes the lights would go up again, and he'd be able to see her.

For an instant she pressed herself close to him, and tried to make the words come out, but they wouldn't.

"Goodbye!" was all she could say. "Goodbye, don't follow me, please!"

She hurried back towards Mother Marlin, and her room, and found that she was running, although for her to run was very dangerous indeed.

"Wait!" he shouted. "Wait, please!"

But she hurried on, without turning, because she knew that his blackout was only temporary, while hers was forever.

The End

He faltered as if the walk were riddled with pitfalls

"If you ever have to make a water rescue, keep out of the victim's reach until he's tired out from thrashing around — then tow him in"

"No lifeguard hates feminine admiration. But he does despise the jackass who likes to pretend he's drowning — and hollers for help"

CAPTAIN CHARLES B. SCULLY has received two awards for lifesaving that he remembers with particular fondness. One was the Congressional Medal of Honor given him for his part in the rescue of thirteen swamped canoeists on a stormy night off Rockaway Point, New York City. The other was twelve enormous tureens of spaghetti (one each succeeding Saturday) from the grateful mother of an Italian boy whom he dragged, unconscious, from the surf.

For 400-odd other rescues he has received — and expected — nothing beyond his salary as a lifeguard and the satisfaction of a job well done. Life and death are all in a day's work for these guardians of the beach — a prosaic job that wouldn't even be necessary if the rest of us weren't so foolish.

Charlie Scully drifted into the work in an odd way. A frail, skinny kid at ten, threatened with lung trouble, his family was advised by a physician to move near the seashore where the boy could get plenty of good air. Playing around the beach, Charlie soon got to know and to idolize the husky lifeguards, who eventually made him their mascot. Swimming almost continuously, the boy rapidly developed a fine physique. And when he came through with a rescue of his own at the age of thirteen, he finally knew that he was destined to become one of this sturdy clan himself.

Serving now in the triple role of Director of the Lifesaving, First Aid and Accident Prevention Services for the New York Chapter of the American Red Cross, Captain Scully has twelve years to his credit as a guard on the busy beaches of the city's metropolitan area, where 500 drownings occur each summer. After that stretch, he taught his stuff at the military and naval academies at West Point and Annapolis; to municipal and state police departments; and in scores of Red Cross training schools throughout the country.

"The difficult thing about many water rescues," he says from his long experience, "is that people get panicky and go berserk — not only the person who's drowning but often the spectators, and sometimes the would-be rescuers. Scores of times, for example, I've seen onlookers who can't swim jump in to save somebody else — which is certainly losing your head completely!"

"I guess the toughest rescue I ever undertook involved a case of group panic. A girl swimming a little too far offshore went down and I went out after her, retrieving her without any difficulty. I was swimming back easily enough, towing her behind me, when suddenly somebody grabbed me around the neck with a grip like death. Hanging on to my first customer, I tried to free this clamp from my windpipe while I treaded water. But before I could wriggle loose still another pair of arms were flung around me from behind. Finally all four of us went down.

"The next thing I knew, I was on the beach getting 'the business' from my pals onshore who had seen the escapade and come after us. The two other swimmers who nearly gummed up the party were friends of the first girl who couldn't swim very well themselves but who decided they'd better help me get her in!"

"The death struggle of a drowning man must be a tough thing to handle," I observed. "Not if the rescuer knows his business," the Captain corrected. "The most difficult rescue I ever made was that of my own brother, who fought like a wild man: it was difficult because I was too young then to know better."

and I tried to fight back. There's a lot of misinformation on that score, you know: many so-called experts advise you to sock the swimmer on the chin and knock him out.

"Well, if you stop to think about it, you'll realize that it takes a trained boxer 'in the pink' to knock a person out with one wallop — even on dry land: in the water, even Joe Louis couldn't get purchase enough to fetch a real blow.

"If you ever have to make a water rescue, forget that stuff. All you have to do, generally, is keep out of reach of the thrashing victim and let him tire himself out — then tow him back to the shore. If he should happen to get tangled up with you, the best expedient is to drag him underwater: he'll invariably let go then, because underwater is precisely the place he doesn't want to be."

Scully went on to emphasize the fact that in a water rescue, swimming should be the last resort, not the first. Most drownings are not far from shallow water, he pointed out, and it is usually possible to reach the victim without going in yourself. If you can get a rope, a plank, an oar or anything of that nature to reach out to him, do it. If you can go after him in a boat, that is much preferable to swimming after him.

On first aid, of course, the accepted method is artificial respiration by the "prone-pressure" method, not that ancient procedure of pumping the victim's arms up and down. In prone pressure you lay the subject face down. Stretch his right hand above his head; fold his left arm and let his cheek rest on the back of the left hand; then straddle him near the knees.

Next you put the palms of your hands on the lowest ribs in the small of his back and, leaning forward, gradually bring your weight to bear (without bending your arms) until your shoulders are about in line with the heels of your hands.

This motion takes about two seconds, after which you swing back and remove the pressure entirely for the same period. Keep repeating the process in this cadence.

"Instead of counting," said the Captain, "we always time the pressure by saying, 'Out goes the bad air,' as we press down; 'In comes the good,' as we straighten up. This maintains the proper rhythm."

"How long should you continue working?" I asked.

"Until the victim begins to breathe naturally — or until a doctor pronounces him dead. However, sometimes even the doctor can be wrong. I know of one case where a fellow was pronounced dead — but the lifeguards refused to quit, and after seven hours of artificial respiration they pulled him around. Incidentally, if a victim has to be removed to a hospital, the artificial respiration should be continued in the ambulance without a break. And whenever a relief man takes over the job, he should slip right into the cadence without missing a beat.

"Those who frequent the water during the summer ought to know this stuff because there's no telling when you will need it. We have about 7,500 drownings a year in this country, about two-thirds of which occur during the summer months. Nine-tenths of the victims are men, by the way, and the majority range between twenty-five and thirty-five years of age. I should say that the trouble with a good half of them is that they have more ego than skill, for most drownings sign. "This other phone is okay," he grunted. "I put the sign on it. I thought I was going to have competition."

She went slowly into the other booth. She hadn't thought him capable of such a mean trick. She called the Express. "I want to call off the contest for today," she told Hale. "I didn't realize what Mr. Reardon was like. I want another chance at him. Just to make things even for today, I have a story maybe even better than this Townsend one."

He listened to her story. "Sounds all right," he admitted, "and I might let you get away with it if it were a news story. But it's a feature story. You and Mr. Reardon are supposed to be competing for news. And you're not doing very well. I might buy your feature story at space rates."

She hung up. Space rates were never paid to regular reporters, just to free lancers.

THE reception was just starting in a big room down the hallway. Behind tables at one end of the room the Jasonville Women's Club was serving fruit punch. Gloria Townsend came up to the punch bowl, and club women leaned across the table to greet her.
Something splintered. The table sagged and the Townsend girl was christened with gallons of punch. Holly took a few notes. The incident would give the story a humorous slant. It would show she was just as much on the job as Bill.

A woman grabbed her arm and quavered, "You mustn't put this in."
Other club women surrounded her and cried that they would never live it down if it got in the papers.

"All right," Holly sighed, "I'll keep it out. But you'd better catch that black-haired young man. He's a reporter, too."

The women fluttered toward Bill.
"This is news," he growled. "I've got to send it in."

Holly groaned. She might as well resign now. It was no use trying to beat a man who had no scruples. It was — She stiffened.

Noise battered her eardrums. One, two, three heavy slams. Somewhere outside, a pneumatic hammer danced on rivets. A car howled away in second gear like a scared cat. Men yelled. The unmistakable reports of high-powered rifles slapped the air. There was a tinny crash. Then silence.

Mr. Jepson hopped into the doorway. "Nobody leave for fifteen minutes," he shouted. "Joe, Eddie, see they don't. All but a reporter from the Express." He dashed away.

Holly wriggled through the crowd and found Bill already at the hallway door, arguing with the guards. "I tell you I'm from the Express," he howled.
"I'm the reporter he meant."

Holly protested, "He did not mean you! You wouldn't even talk to him, Bill Reardon. As far as he knows you're on the staff of the World Almanac. He meant me."

Bill shrugged. "You meet these crazy kids everywhere," he told the men.
"They'll do anything for a thrill.
She's not working press."

SHE looked at him as if he were a hole in a sock. "Here's my police card," she said. "Ask him for his."

"Why, why, you know I haven't been in Philadelphia long enough to get a police card! Of all the mean, low-down —"

"The only card he has," she added, "is in his right-hand coat pocket. It's a telephone company card."

One of the men felt in the pocket.
He drew out a square white card, read it and looped its cord over one of Bill's vest buttons. "That's what you are, buddy," he grunted. "Out of Order."

They stood aside for Holly to pass.
She darted through the corridor and into the street. Her heart was tumbling around like an egg in boiling water.
A black sedan, doors dangling open, was crumpled against an electric-light pole fifty yards away. A pungent odor of smokeless powder stung her nose. On the opposite sidewalk lay an untidy clump of brass cartridge shells. Something big had happened — she had it to herself for fifteen minutes — and she didn't know

Rhymes About Town

THE SINFUL CINEMA

I'm just a normal human creature,
Indignant at the double feature.

The good one always starts at seven,
And not again until eleven.

So even though I bolt my meal,
I miss the first and second reel.

To see them, I must languish there
On my protesting derrière.

And doze, upright, through hours of drivel,
Which leaves me feeling far from civil.

how to cover a big story, it seemed.

A small boy slid into her as if she were home plate. "Mr. Jepson sent me," he screamed. "He says come to Doc Harkins's office down the street.
Bank robbers! Can I help you? I'm Elmo. You gave me a lift. Can I?"

He clung to her legs and gasped for breath. Holly felt herself steadying.
This wasn't going to be so hard.
People were beginning to help her, just the way they always helped her on her small assignments. And she had half of the story already. The feature story about Mr. Jepson had turned into hot news. She even had the names of the riflemen he had stationed across the street. But Bill would be getting out in fifteen minutes...

"There's another reporter in there," she said. "A man I don't like. He's the one in the yellow roadster who wouldn't give any of you boys a lift.
When he comes out, give him the works."

Elmo squinted at the Borough Hall doorway over an imaginary slingshot.
"The works!" he yelled. "Hey! boys!"

At Doc Harkins's office she waited in a tiny gilt parlor for Mr. Jepson.
Finally he shuffled into the room.

"Council won't like paying doctor bills for them three fellows," he muttered. "But what can you do when two of 'em run out of the bank with

Tommy guns and wouldn't put up their hands?"

"Council ought to give you a raise!
If you hadn't been suspicious and thought of the kidnapping —"

"Ought to of known it was the bank they was after. It stood to reason.
Everybody in Town Hall. Nothing open but the bank and post office.
Well, got your pencil and paper? John
A. Jepson — don't forget the A. — plugged two of them in the leg. Ellery put a thirty-thirty through the driver's shoulder. They —" He went on for ten minutes and gave her every detail, except the names of the men. He promised to get the identification as soon as possible.

SHE checked the time, saw that she had thirty-two minutes to make the night extra, and hurried back to the bank to find out what had happened inside. The crowd had been released from Borough Hall, but Bill wasn't among those jammed in front of the bank. That was odd. He would have been first out to the street. She wanted to ask Elmo or one of the other boys where he had gone, but they had disappeared too. Then she realized, sickeningly, where he must be. In the bank, cleaning up the story.

"No reporter came in here," the guard said. "And none are going to.
Orders from Mr. Eakin."

A plump woman bounced up to the guard, and babbled, "They tell me somebody tried to hold up the bank!
Is everything all right?"

The guard touched his cap. "None of us hurt, Mrs. Eakin."

A woman in the crowd called, "Mrs.
Eakin! Tell him to let this nice girl in to get her story. She's the one who promised not to tell her paper about you and the others upsetting the table."

"I — I'd like to," Mrs. Eakin said.
"But you know how Mr. Eakin is about his orders."

Holly pleaded, "Then ask him the questions yourself! Ask him what the men said when they came in and what the bank employees did and how much money —"

"Dear me, that would be exciting.
That would make me a — a —"

"A gal reporter!" Holly cried.

Mrs. Eakin blushed. "A — a gal reporter! Really I — I — it makes one feel terribly young." She skipped into the bank.

A tall woman marched through the crowd. "We appreciated your action

A Short Story Complete in This Issue

"SHE had such a lovely smile," said Mary Bridger, reflectively. The Bridgers and the Bagots were talking over the fire, about old friends. This one, Helen Folliott, the girl with the lovely smile, had vanished. She had come to grief somehow, they had heard. Each of them, they agreed, had always known that she would, and, what was odd, none of them had ever forgotten her. "She had such a lovely smile," Lucy Bagot repeated.

So they began to discuss the oddities of human affairs — what a toss-up it seems whether you sink or swim, and what a difference trifles make.

Then they were silent. That was why they heard a whistle — a train or a siren — a faint far whistle that sounded over the flat Suffolk fields and dwindled away. The sound must have suggested something, to the Bagots anyhow, for Lucy said, looking at her husband, "She had such a lovely smile."

He nodded. "You couldn't drown a puppy who grinned in the face of death," he said.

The Bridgers looked puzzled.

"Our dog," said Lucy.

"Tell us the story of your dog," the Bridgers insisted.

Tom Bagot protested that it wasn't a story; it was a character study; they would think him sentimental. But they urged him.

"You can't drown a puppy who grins in the face of death," he repeated. "Old Holland said that, the snowy night when he held her over the water butt. He was a farmer, down in Wiltshire. He'd heard gipsies — that's to say a whistle. Out he went into the snow with a dog whip. They'd gone, but left something behind them — a crumpled piece of paper it looked like, in the hedge.

"But it was a basket, one of those rush baskets that women take to market, and in it, stitched up so that she couldn't follow, was a little scrap of a dog. They'd given her a hunk of bread and a twist of straw —"

"Which shows," Lucy interrupted, "that they hadn't the heart to kill her."

"NOR had he — old Holland," Tom Bagot went on. "He held her over the water and then" — Bagot raised his little grizzled mustache over his upper teeth — "she grinned up at him like that in the moonlight. He spared her. She was a wretched little mongrel, half fox terrier, half the Lord knows what. She looked as if she'd never had a square meal. Her coat was rough as a door scraper. But she had — what d'you call it when you forgive a person a dozen times a day against your better judgment? Charm? Character? Whatever it was, she had that.

"She made his life a burden to him. Put all the neighbors against him. Chased their hens. Worried the sheep. A dozen times he was on the point of killing her. Yet he couldn't bring himself to do it — not until she'd killed the cat, his wife's favorite. It was the wife who insisted.

THE LITTLE DOG LAUGHED

The not very private life of Gipsy, who knew how to make people want to do what she wanted

by Virginia Woolf

Illustrated by Morgan Dennis

"So once more he took her out into the yard, stood her against the wall, and was about to pull the trigger. And again — she grinned; grinned right into the face of death, and he hadn't the heart to do it.

So they left it to the butcher — to do what they couldn't. Then — chance again.

"It was a little miracle in its way — our letter coming that very morning. We lived in London then; we'd a cook who swore she'd heard rats in the wainscot. Couldn't sleep another night in the place and so on. By chance again — we'd spent a summer there — I thought of Holland, wrote and asked him if he'd a dog to sell us, a terrier, to catch rats. The postman met the butcher: it was the butcher who delivered the letter.

"So by the skin of her teeth Gipsy was saved again. He was glad, I can tell you — old Holland. He popped her straight into the train with a letter. 'Her looks are against her, but believe me, she's a dog of character.' We stood her on the kitchen table. A more miserable object you never saw. 'Rats? Why, they'd eat her,' said old Biddy."

Here Tom Bagot paused. It is difficult for a man to say why he fell in love with a woman, but it is still more difficult to say why he fell in love with a mongrel terrier. Yet that was what had happened. It was a love story Bagot was telling. Mary Bridger was sure of that by something in his voice. A fantastic idea came to her that he might have been in love with Helen Folliott, the girl with the lovely smile. Perhaps he connected the two somehow.

"We never taught Gipsy a thing," Tom Bagot continued. "Yet every day she'd have something new to show us. One little trick after another. She'd bring me letters in her mouth. Or, Lucy lighting a match, she'd put it out with her naked paw. Or she'd bark when the telephone rang. 'Curse that bell,' she'd say as plain as anything. And visitors — d'you remember how she'd size up our friends? 'You may stay' — she'd jump and lick your hand; 'No, we don't want you,' and she'd rush to the door as if to show them the way out. She was as good a judge of people as you are."

"Yes," Lucy confirmed him, "she was a dog of character. And yet," she added, "lots of people didn't see it. There was that man who gave us Hector."

"Hopkins by name," said Bagot. "A stockbroker. Very proud of his little place in Surrey. You know the sort — all boots and gaiters, like the pictures in the sporting papers. He couldn't endure to see us with a wretched little mongrel like that. So he gave us a present. A dog called Hector, a red setter with a tail like a ramrod and a pedigree as long as your arm. Gipsy might have sulked. She might have taken it amiss. But she was a dog of sense. Nothing petty about her. Live and let live — that was her motto. You'd meet the two of 'em in the High street, trotting round together."

"Give Hector his due, he was a perfect gentleman," Lucy interrupted.

"All went smoothly. We were a happy family," Tom continued. "Nothing to break the harmony until —" here he hesitated. "Come to think of it," he blurted out, "you can't blame nature. She was in the prime of life — two years old, and full of life — full of fun — as a girl should be —"

"You're thinking of the dinner party," his wife helped him. "The night the Harvey Sinnotts dined with us. The fourteenth of February — which," she added with a queer little smile — "is St. Valentine's day."

"So it was," Tom Bagot resumed. "Well, people of the name of Sinnott were dining with us. Never met 'em before. Husband connected with the firm. It was a formal occasion — for people like ourselves a bit of an ordeal. She," he indicated his wife, "took no end of trouble; fussed about for days beforehand. Everything must be just so. It was a slap-up affair and no mistake about it. A trifle on the formal side —"

"MRS. SINNOTT was one of those women," Lucy struck in, "who seem to be asking themselves, 'What's it cost? Is it real?' taking notes while they talk to you. And rather overdressed. Dinner was half through and she was saying what a pleasure it was — they were staying as they always did at the Ritz — to have a quiet little meal. So simple, so homely. It was such a rest —"

"No sooner were the words out of her mouth," Bagot broke in, "than there was an explosion — A sort of under-table earthquake. A scuffle. A squeak. Mrs. Sinnott rose to her feet and screamed, 'Something's biting me! Something's biting me!'"

"I ducked under the table. Oh, that abandoned little creature! That imp of mischief! There on the floor at the lady's feet — she'd given birth — had a puppy!" The memory was too much for him. He lay back in his chair, shaking with laughter.

"So," he continued, "I wrapped a napkin round 'em. I carried 'em both out. Mercifully the puppy was dead, I faced her with the fact. I held it under her nose. Out in the back yard, in the moonlight, under the pure gaze of the stars. I could have beaten her within an inch of her life. But how can you beat a dog that grins? By Jove! She scampered round the yard, the little hussy, chasing a cat — No, I hadn't the heart to do it."

"And the Harvey Sinnotts were very nice about it," said Lucy. "It broke the ice. We were all good friends after that."

"We forgave her," Tom Bagot continued. "We said it mustn't happen again. And it didn't. Never again. But other things did. I could tell you one story after another. One day we tried to play a trick on her. She had a passion for raw fruit — apples, plums. We gave her a plum with a stone in it. 'What'll she do with it?' we asked. Rather than hurt our feelings, if you'll believe me, she held that plum in her mouth, and then, when she thought we weren't looking, dropped the stone in her bowl of water and came back wagging her tail. It was as if she'd

Don't Be Fat!

Says Lovely Irene Rich

Now, without following a strict diet list, or taking exercises or drugs, it is possible to safely lose excess weight.

In every section of the country today, women have marveled at the wonders of a safe, easy reducing method—which requires no strict diet lists; no strenuous exercises; no drugs. Increases energy as weight goes down. It's the identical method Dr. Damrau of New York used in tests among a group of intelligent and cooperative people who followed directions implicitly, and was responsible for an average loss in weight of 7 pounds per month.

Unbelievably Easy To Follow

All you do is mix  $\frac{3}{4}$  glass of Welch Grape Juice with  $\frac{1}{4}$  glass of water and drink before meals and at bedtime. Then eat sensibly—which means you avoid overeating; thus reducing caloric intake considerably. Then this happens: First, this delicious drink satisfies your craving for rich, sweet foods. You have less desire to overeat fattening foods—but you never suffer a hungry moment. Second, the natural dextrose in Welch's is quickly consumed, and by this process not only aids nature in consuming excess fat but also increases your energy.

That is why weight is lost naturally; why you not only look better but actually feel better; have more energy. And this proved method is just as beneficial and effective for overweight men, as it is for overweight women.

Do This One Important Thing

There is only one thing to watch—eat sensibly, which means you avoid overeating, and be sure to use only genuine Welch Grape Juice, selected by Dr. Damrau in his convincing test. Welch's is always full strength. It contains full measure of natural dextrose which is so important. And because Welch's is always full strength, it is delicious when diluted—very economical to use. Start this proved reducing method today and watch your energy go up as your weight goes down.

Irene Rich, past 40, still has her lovely slenderness of 16. She recommends the easy Welch way to reduce.

AMAZING TOMATO JUICE THRILLS THE NATION

If you think all tomato juice is alike, try Welch's new vitamin-rich tomato juice for the thrill of your life. A noted chemist tested five brands and found Welch's Tomato Juice superior—larger Vitamin C content; as much Vitamin A as milk—and rich in Vitamin B. Welch's is so rich and thick, you can add  $\frac{1}{2}$  water, or ice, and still have a most delicious tomato juice. So it's economical to serve. Get Welch's Tomato Juice from your dealer today. It's pure, pasteurized, laboratory controlled and tested and approved by Good Housekeeping Bureau. Double your money back if you don't say it's the finest tomato juice you ever tasted.

FOR BEAUTIFUL FEET—

Here's how to take proper care of them

by Sylvia Blythe

WE EXPECT our feet to bear the burden of our support and look their best while they do it. Yet most of us are inclined to give these downtrodden members the least care of any part of our body. This criticism comes from the specialist of a successful foot comfort shop.

Sightseeing this summer on the exhibition grounds of the two World Fairs revives the lost art of walking and common foot ailments are on daily parade.

If you limped into a foot comfort shop, experts would get at the bottom of the trouble by examining the fit of your shoes. Through the probing eye of a fluoroscope, a device that penetrates leather, you would see for yourself whether your toes were lined up properly.

Properly, the inner sole of your shoe should be a half inch longer than your longest foot, which is usually the left foot. Giving your feet room in which to roam applies to stockings as well as to shoes. It is better to have your hose a half size too large than to seal your feet up in snug silk.

If you want your feet to grow old gracefully and give you the most in good looks and comfort now, keep a pair of scientifically fitted shoes at home or in a locker where you work, and use them to spell the fancy shoes you wear for display. Wearing careful shoes with two-inch heels an hour or so a day for walking or other strenuous purposes will help you to keep your feet happy and in better shape when you dress them up.

The best way to cope with corns, calluses or bunions, says this specialist, is to remove their cause, which, in most cases, is improperly fitted shoes. In the meantime, there are dependable remedies that give you relief. Corns, caused when shoes rub against toes, may be relieved by medicated pads that reduce friction, allay soreness and loosen up the kernel. There are liquid removers which tend to loosen the corn so that you can lift it out more easily.

Calluses, like corns, are horny skin that tends to increase and spread. They usually appear on the bottom of the feet. They are caused by pressure or friction of shoes, but you can alleviate pressure with callus pads, medicated to relieve pain and soften up the hardened area. Where calluses are not painful, you can whet them down with pumice, before the bath. Cutting either corns or calluses is ill-advised, because of the danger of infection. Bunions, usually caused by crowding the great toe into tight stockings or shoes, may often be relieved by pads that reduce pressure over the troubled joint and allow any inflammation to subside.

If the bunion remains painful and tender, in spite of such care, a physician should be consulted since some bunions require surgical correction if there is to be relief.

Give Feet Daily Care

NEXT in importance to properly fitted shoes, is the daily care you give your feet. These extremities are the farthest outposts in the circulatory route; so, unless there is some abnormal foot condition present, feet benefit more from stimulating treatment than any other part of the body. If there are distended veins, skin infections, swelling or other abnormal disorders present in the feet or the legs, stimulation whether by hand or vibratory massage is not advisable. Otherwise, and for most feet, they are excellent.

Even a foot bath will give you stimulation, but it must be more than a soaking in a tub. One method is to use one of the granular or powdery foot soaps that are slow in yielding up lather, and force you to manipulate your feet with your hands in order to work up gratifying suds. The friction aids circulation, loosens secretions and helps to slough off dead cuticle. In drying your feet, always rub them vigorously, and bring your towel upward, not downward.

In addition, two minutes of massage after your bath will help to keep your feet in finer fettle. Get ready for massage with your feet stretched before you one at a time on a stool, and spread on a massage cream, a soothing liniment or a cooling menthol lotion to give easy slide to your hands. Then begin at the toes, keeping your fingers in firm contact with the flesh, and drawing both hands toward you, as you work upward in the direction of the knees. Repeat the movement continuously for about two minutes. When you are finished remove any surplus oil and sprinkle on a soothing, deodorant powder. A regular foot powder is not as likely to cake on feet that are inclined to perspire as the usual body powders.

If you like a deeper foot massage than you can give with your hands, an electric vibrator, applied with moderation, is safe to use. You can get these vibrators equipped with two kinds of cushion, a sponge rubber for gentle probing of tender skins, a heavy rubber for deeper massage on tougher surfaces.

As for the pedicure, filing the nails straight across is advised unless they curve into fatty cushions of flesh. If that is the case, follow the direction your nail grows, when you file them, and keep them short for comfort. Horny cuticle, one of the hardest things to cope with in turning out well-groomed toes may be filed down with an emery board, a home equivalent of the chiropodist's small electric buzzer. If cuticle is soft, you can oil it, and shred it off in clean outlines with the same type of cuticle remover that you use for your manicure. Polish, seen on smart beaches this summer, is apt to be the same color on toenails and fingernails and the vivid colors make flattering foils for sun-drenched feet and hands. Colorless polish, however, is still the choice of women who want to seal up their toenails in clean but inconspicuous jackets.

LIFELINES FOR SUMMER SWIMMERS

don't just happen—they are committed.

"How do you mean?" I inquired. "Well, a lot of them are not in good physical condition to start with," replied the Captain, "and they tire out quickly. If they are out beyond their depth when this happens, they get panicky when they can't touch bottom and immediately begin to thrash around, thus hastening the fatigue which finally carries them under. It's hard to understand why they don't just get over on their backs and float—but they lose their heads and drown themselves.

"Then another substantial proportion violate the old law about going in too soon after eating. Taking your stomach into cold water on top of the typical picnic lunch of hamburgers and beans and pickles and beer and heaven knows what else is pretty rough treatment. It frequently results in cramps. And the swimmer who gets stomach cramps (leg or arm cramps are not serious as a rule) is usually a goner if he isn't helped quickly.

"They used to say that you shouldn't go into the water for an hour after eating—but that means in a bathtub. I'd say that it isn't safe to swim until two hours after a meal.

"A third reason for drownings, of course, is the swimmer who, though he may be in perfect condition, just plain exceeds his capabilities and finds himself in deep water when his strength begins to ebb. There's no sense to it, but an awful lot of people do it, as is evident from the fact that most drowning cases are not nonswimmers but folks who can swim at least well enough to get into trouble. Sometimes at the beaches swimmers from inland who are accustomed to fresh water inadvertently get themselves into trouble.

There is a theory that salt water is

TRY THESE DISHES FROM POLAND

A famous chef who escaped to our country offers some fine recipes

by Grace Turner

THE Polish restaurant at the New York World's Fair has proved even more popular this year than it did last. The primary reason is, of course, that the food is both interesting and excellent. But visitors this year have felt a special attraction. They admire what seems to them a gallant enterprise, in view of the recent Polish tragedy. And they are more right about the gallantry than most of them realize, until they know the whole story behind the venture.

It was the Polish meat packers, with headquarters in New York City, who backed the restaurant last summer and brought over ninety Poles to run it in genuine Polish fashion. The meat packers did this as a promotion for their Polish ham, which was one of Poland's most important exports. Poland is essentially an agricultural country, and the peasants who work the land went in heavily, with the help of the government, for raising pigs. Since corn is not raised extensively in Poland — as is true likewise in most of Europe — the pigs are fed on wheat and rye mixtures, potatoes and sour milk. This diet, combined probably with the effect of Polish climate and soil and the Polish method of curing ham, resulted in a special flavor that Americans liked very much. So, approximately forty per cent of exports of Polish ham came to this country.

On September 1, 1939, while the Polish restaurant was still doing a rush business at the Fair, Poland was invaded, and the ninety Poles working at the restaurant were cut off indefinitely from their people, their homes and their country.

"We felt a moral responsibility for these people," says Richard Rokicki, who represents both the meat packers and the restaurant. "So, when the Fair closed, the Union of Polish Meat Packers put up the money to enable us to open a model Polish restaurant in New York City. We took over the old Embassy Club, and redecorated it in the Polish tradition."

"The murals there were done by Boleslaw Cybis, one of our best Polish artists, now a refugee. The orchestra, under the direction of Franciszek Witkowski, was the one brought over for the World's Fair Restaurant, and had been Poland's outstanding dance orchestra. We staffed the restaurant with our World's Fair employees, though the present head chef is a later refugee to this country."

Meanwhile, this particular little group of Poles is carrying on at both restaurants. They have heard nothing from or about their families back in Poland, and have no way of communicating with them. The present chef, Stanislaw Mencler, a native of Warsaw, was serving his country on the S.S. Pilsudski when she went down in January. He was rescued and made his way as a refugee to the United States.

Mencler is one of Poland's finest chefs, a product of the famous, 800-year-old Polish school for chefs. As all who are trained there must do, he entered the school before he was fifteen and served a six years' apprenticeship.

Among the most characteristic of all Polish dishes are the Polish soups, particularly the cold soups. One of the most popular dishes at the Polish restaurant is fruit soup, Mencler says. It is served cold and can be made from practically any fruit — pears, berries, peaches or apples. Blueberry soup, which was a new version created last year, proved enormously popular.

Chlodnik, another cold soup, but this time made on a fish base, is also a favorite. It is partly the use of sour cream that makes these soups so unique and so pleasing in both taste and consistency. This is also typical of Polish cooking, where cream, butter and eggs are lavishly used — again the mark of an agricultural people.

Probably the most popular entree, says the chef, is chicken Polish style. And Polish pastry is particularly delicious. Though somewhat similar to French pastry, it is more often made with yeast than theirs is.

Mencler has given us recipes for these dishes that Americans seem particularly to like. We have tested them and, where necessary, adapted them to American methods of cooking, and recommend them wholeheartedly to our readers.

Chlodnik (a soup)

1 pint sour cream
½ cup sweet-sour pickle brine
2 cooked beets, finely chopped
½ cucumber, finely chopped
2 hard-cooked eggs, finely chopped
3 tablespoons chives
½ teaspoon salt
Dash paprika
1 sour pickle, finely chopped
Combine sour cream and pickle brine. Mix beets, cucumber, eggs, chives, salt, paprika, and pickle. Add to sour cream; chill and serve. Yield: about 6 portions.

Stuffed Chicken — Polish Style

1½ pound broiling chicken
1 hard roll
¾ cup milk
4 tablespoons butter
2 tablespoons ground roll
1 egg, beaten
1 egg yolk, beaten
½ teaspoon salt
Dash pepper

Clean, wash and dry broiler. Soak hard roll in milk until it is well saturated, then squeeze out excess milk. To this milk add 2 tablespoons melted butter, ground roll, and egg and egg yolk beaten together. Add this to saturated roll and mix until uniform consistency is reached. Place stuffing in broiler and top with remaining butter. Place broiler in hot oven (400 degrees F.) and roast about 30 minutes or until tender. Yield: 2 portions.

Blueberry Soup

2 cups water
1 pint blueberries
½ cup sugar
1 lemon, thinly sliced
½ cinnamon stick
½ pint heavy sour cream

Place water in saucepan; add blueberries, sugar, lemon slices, and cinnamon stick. Boil slowly for about 15 minutes, then pour mixture through strainer. Let cool. After it is thoroughly chilled, stir in sour cream; mix thoroughly and serve. Yield: 6 portions.

Babka — Podolian Style

½ cup sugar
1 teaspoon salt
½ cup shortening
1¼ cups scalded milk
2 cakes compressed yeast
5 cups sifted all-purpose flour (about)
4 eggs, beaten
1 tablespoon orange peel
2 teaspoons lemon peel
¼ cup chopped almonds
¾ cup raisins

Measure sugar, salt and shortening into large bowl; add hot milk. Cool to lukewarm; then add some of warm mixture to yeast and stir until soft. Combine with rest of milk mixture. Stir in half the flour; add eggs and beat until smooth. Stir in remaining ingredients and remaining flour. Turn onto floured board; knead until elastic and bubbles show under surface, 7 to 10 minutes. Place in greased bowl; cover and set in a warm place. Let rise. When double in size, remove from bowl and turn into greased tube pan about 9 inches in diameter across top. Bake in a moderate oven (375 degrees F.) 35 minutes or until raised and brown.

WHAT TO DO ABOUT POISON IVY

Here are some simple rules for spotting it — and for treatment if it spots you first

EVERY summer, ivy poisoning ruins the vacations of countless thousands. If you've ever seen a real case of it — with the victim sick in bed, running a high temperature, arms, legs or face swollen and blotched with blisters, you'll take pains to remember a childhood jingle that says:

Leaflets three poison me;
Leaflets five, I'm alive.

Poison ivy is often mistaken for a wild flower that is variously called Virginia creeper, wild clematis, woodbine or virgin's bower; but it is distinguishable by these points:

1. The oval leaves, growing three on a stem (five for woodbine, etc.), are glossy or oily-looking and may be slightly or entirely toothed along the edges.
2. Poison ivy is a creeping vine when mature, climbing over rocks, fences, tree trunks. But when young it is a low, woody plant standing erect.
3. In May or June the ivy bears clusters of small yellowish-green flowers growing out of the base of the leaf stems. In the autumn the flowers give way to grapelike clusters of white, waxy berries that remain into the winter.
4. In the fall the ivy leaf turns a brilliant crimson.

The poison may be contracted by touching any part of the plant: root, stem, leaf, flower or berry. It is so hardy that you can get it by merely unlacing your shoes after having walked through an ivy patch; one recorded case occurred four months after the clothing had been in contact with the ivy. It is just as dangerous in the winter as in the summer, although hot weather, with its consequent greater exposure, is the worst season. The best home remedy is a lavish washing with yellow laundry soap, which cuts away the offending oil.

Washing in strong soapsuds will give relief even after itching and blisters have appeared. The soapsuds' most efficient use, however, is soon after you touch the plant itself. The dermatitis may appear from one to three days after contact; appearing later is a sign that you are probably getting the stuff off some portion of your clothing. In that event, send the garments to the cleaner's, warning him of the situation.

For relief from itching, calamine lotion, applied with cotton, has been found effective; and if the itching is severe your doctor may suggest adding an antipruritic, such as three per cent benzocaine, to the calamine. If small blisters unite to form large ones, see your doctor.

Immunity can be provided in a certain percentage of cases by the injection of ivy-poison extracts by an experienced physician. Self-medication with such preparations is dangerous. So also is the old notion that immunity can be obtained by eating poison-ivy leaves.

The best method of eradicating poison-ivy plants is to grub them up, going over the ground repeatedly to catch all of the long roots and tendrils. Debris should be burned, but the worker must take care not to stand in the smoke even momentarily. Gloves should be worn for such work, and both shirt sleeves and trouser legs tied securely.

Spraying with various solutions may also be employed to destroy the plants. One formula recommended by the National Safety Council calls for three pounds of salt to each gallon of slightly soapy water; another specifies the use of crankcase oil diluted with kerosene or ordinary fuel oil. The Garden Clubs recommend a solution composed of two pounds of sulphate of iron to 100 gallons of water applied in a fine mist to the foliage.

Some people seem to be immune to ivy poisoning in small dosages, but the ratio is scanty and unreliable. The fact that you were immune last month does not prove that you will be immune next month.

The safest rule is to be on constant guard against contact with the stuff — and this goes double for poison sumac, the most virulent shrub in the United States. Worse than ivy, because it contains more virulent oil, this type of sumac ranges throughout the entire eastern half of the country in swampy locations, which accounts for its other name, swamp sumac.

Swamp sumac has an oily, waxy leaf. There are from seven to eleven leaves on a stem. These leaves resemble those of the elder bush and in many places the shrub is known as poison elder. On poison sumac the yellowish-green flowers and, later, the dirty-white berries droop downward from a notch between the leaves and stem.

The treatment for the poison-sumac irritation is the same as for poison ivy.

booth. One of them popped out at sight of Holly. It was Elmo.

"Holding the phone for you," he shrieked. Then he turned, put his tongue between his lips; sent a rasping noise at Bill.

"Call off your army," Bill mumbled. "I haven't got anything. Only know there was a holdup."

"But you weren't around for twenty minutes! Didn't you —"

"COUPLE of kids pointed to the wrecked car and said the men had run off down the street. The kids piled in my car with me. We got a mile or so out of town and they pointed to some men around a barn. I parked and ran up to them. A new calf. Got back. Air out of my tires. Cut back across fields. Ought to be fired." She knew that this was the moment to gloat — but — but he looked so helpless. Like a man trying to sew on a button or bake a cake or mind a baby.

"Bill," she faltered, "I — I have plenty of notes for both of us. I'll get the boys out of the booths and we —"

His fingers twitched. "Get in that booth and start phoning," he roared. "I'm not asking any girl for help."

Four hours later they were standing before the Managing Editor's desk, and Mr. Hale was looking at Bill as distastefully as if he had been a piece of canned copy.

"So the working press got licked by a girl," he said.

"Sure I got licked. Not by her, though. By Jasonville. Boss, you never saw anything like it. She had the whole town working for her. I couldn't get to first base."

"First base? Mr. Reardon, you didn't even come to bat. It seems to me that there is a place on the Express for a girl who can get a whole town working for her."

"And none for a guy who gets a whole town working against him. I get it. You're firing me."

"On the other hand," Hale mused, "I've known you to get stories with a whole commonwealth working against you. I think I'll use you two as a team. I want to be sure of getting the story."

said, 'Had you there! But I don't want to hurt your feelings.' Yes, she taught us a lesson in manners.

"I've often wondered," he went on, "what she was thinking about us, as she lay down there among all the boots and old matches on the hearthrug? You'd see them lying there, Gipsy on her side of the fire, Hector on his, as different as chalk from cheese. He was an aristocrat, she a dog of the people. It was natural, with her mother a poacher, her father the Lord knows who, and her master a gipsy. When we took them out together, Hector was as prim as a policeman, all on the side of law and order. Gipsy was jumping the railings, scaring the royal ducks, but always on the side of the sea gulls — vagabonds like herself.

"We'd take her along the river, where people feed the gulls. 'Take your bit of fish,' she'd say. 'You've earned it.' I've seen her, if you'll believe me, let one of them feed out of her mouth. But she had no patience with the pampered rich — the pug dogs, the lap dogs. You could fancy she and Hector arguing the matter, down there on the hearthrug. The Tory and the democrat. And by Jove! she converted the old boy. We ought to have known better. Yes, I've often blamed myself. But there it is — after a thing's over, it's easy to see how it could have been prevented."

A shadow crossed his face. "It was that old fool, Hector," he continued. "I never like handsome dogs. There's no harm in them, but there's no character. Hector may have been jealous. He hadn't her sense of what's fitting. Just because she did a thing, he must go one better. One fine day he jumped over the garden wall, crashed through a neighbor's glass house, ran between an old chap's legs, collided with a car and made a dent in the bonnet, though he never hurt himself. That day's work cost us five pound ten and a visit to the police court. It was all Gipsy's doing. Without her

Uncle Oscar Gets Around

MY UNCLE OSCAR gets around. The way he puts it, he quit workin' a few years ago and began livin'.

Now, that takes a little advance plannin'. Me, if I quit workin' I'd quit eatin'. But Uncle Oscar sold a horse in December of '99 and put the hundred dollars into the beginnin' of a retirement fund. He nursed and fed this old-age kitty up until 1933. That was the year, you remember, when most of us quit lookin' around corners for prosperity, and found ourselves lookin' over our shoulders for the big bad wolf.

Not Uncle Oscar, though. He just relaxed and started restin'.

"Shucks," said Uncle Oscar to his boy one day, "the only way I can think of to relieve unemployment is to make somebody a job. Here, take mine."

And with that he told the insurance company he was ready to start ridin' the return portion of his annuity ticket.

I don't know how much he gets a month but it's plenty to keep him in what he calls "comfort, vergin' on indecency." He just wanders around the country, managin' to be in St. Petersburg or in San Diego when it's cold and in Maine or Yellowstone when you and me are pantin' for breath in August.

"Why, shucks," says Uncle Oscar, "the art of horseshoe pitchin' would of died out long ago if it wasn't for old duffers like me, too old to play marbles!"

LIFELINES FOR SUMMER SWIMMERS

easier to swim in than fresh water. But they overlook the fact that you take a lot of pushing around from the surf, so you get tired much quicker in the ocean than you do in a lake or a quiet river.

"All of this is just plain horse sense, to be sure. But it is the lack of horse sense among so many swimmers that keeps the lifeguards hopping — sometimes in vain."

"Are there any special bugaboos in this business of lifesaving?" I asked Captain Scully.

"Yes, a couple," he said a little grimly. "In fact, you might say three. One is the family of week-enders who come down to the beach with a couple of inner tubes for 'water wings.' Whenever a guard sees an inner tube appear, he sticks close to the party."

"A more serious bugaboo, however, is that common phenomenon, mass panic, which so often sweeps through a lot of people when somebody goes down and the shouting starts. Time and again I've seen cases where a weak swimmer goes under, somebody near by yells for help—and immediately four or five others within earshot begin to thrash around and sink. Just hysteria, of course, but it keeps the boys busy when it breaks out. For that reason you'll never see all the guards on duty go to work on the same job; a couple always remain on shore to keep their eyes peeled for the next customers.

"But the pet hate of the service," the Captain continued, "is the jackass who thinks it comical to pretend he's drowning, and hollers for help. He not only frightens other swimmers but he drags the men out on wild-goose chases which they know darn well are needless but which they can't ignore for fear of criticism from the public."

"You know they're kidding?" I asked, surprised. "How?"

"Well," said Scully with a grin, "these playboys forget that a drowning man seldom yells for help until he's going down and is 'shipping water.' By that time he's pretty well spent and, with a mouthful of water to boot, he doesn't holler very loud or very clearly. But the boys always go out for false alarms, of course, just in case."

There was a moment's pause and then he added: "I know lifeguards who have a treatment for that ingrown sense of humor."

"Yes?" I queried.

He chuckled reflectively and said—"It's not in the manual—but they hold those guys under until they damn near do drown. One treatment is guaranteed to cure!"

The End

LITTLE DOG LAUGHED

he'd have been as tame as an old sheep.

"Well, one of them had to go. Strictly speaking, it should have been Gipsy. But look at it this way: Say you've two maids; you can't keep them both; one's sure of a place, but the other — she might find herself out of a job, in the soup. We gave Hector to friends; we kept Gipsy."

"Things went wrong after that," said Lucy Bagot. "Gipsy felt she'd done a good dog out of a home. She showed it in all sorts of queer little ways." There was a pause. The tragedy, whatever it was, came closer, the absurd little tragedy which both these middle-aged people found it so hard to tell and so hard to forget. "We never knew till then," Bagot continued, "how much she'd got in her. Human beings can speak. They can say, 'I'm sorry,' and there's an end of it. But with a dog it's different. Dogs can't talk. But dogs remember."

"She remembered," Lucy confirmed him. "She showed it. One night, for instance, she brought an old rag doll into the drawing room. I was sitting there alone. She brought it in and laid it on the floor at my feet, as if to say, 'Will this make up for Hector?'"

"Another time," Bagot went on, "the door opened; in she marched with a white cat. A wretched beast. And he wouldn't leave us. We didn't want him. She didn't either. But it meant something. To make up for Hector?"

"Or there may have been another reason," Lucy went on. "That's what I never could decide. Did she want to give us a hint? To prepare us? If only she could have spoken! Then we could have reasoned with her, tried to persuade her. As it was, we sensed all winter that something was wrong."

"She'd fall asleep and start yelping, as if she were dreaming. Then she'd wake up and run round the room with her ears cocked, as if she'd heard something. Often I'd go to the door and look out. But there wasn't anyone."

"Sometimes she'd begin trembling all over, half afraid, half eager. Why? If she'd been a woman, you'd have said that some temptation was gradually overcoming her. There was something she tried to resist, but couldn't, something in her blood that was too strong for her. That was the feeling we had . . . And she wouldn't go out with us. There she would sit on the hearthrug, listening, waiting. But it's better to tell you the facts and let you judge for yourselves."

Lucy stopped, but Tom nodded at her. "You tell the end," he said, for the plain reason that he couldn't trust himself to tell the end.

Lucy Bagot began; she spoke stiffly, to conceal her feelings: "It was a winter's evening, the sixteenth of December, 1937. Augustus, the white cat, sat on one side of the fire, Gipsy on the other. Snow was falling. All the street sounds were dulled."

"Tom said: 'You could hear a pin drop. It's as quiet as the country.' And that, of course, made us listen. A bus passed in a distant street. A door slammed. One could hear footsteps retreating. Everything seemed to be vanishing away, lost in the falling snow. And then — we only heard it because we were listening — a whistle sounded, a long, low whistle, dwindling away. Gipsy heard it. She looked up. She trembled all over. Then she grinned —" Lucy stopped. She controlled her voice.

"Next morning she was gone."

THERE was dead silence. They had a sense of a vast empty space round them, of friends vanishing forever, summoned by some mysterious voice away into the snow.

"You never found her?" Mary Bridger asked at length.

Tom Bagot shook his head. "Never, never," he said. "We offered a reward, consulted the police. There was a rumor — some one had seen gipsies passing."

"What do you think she heard? What was she grinning at?" Lucy Bagot asked. "Oh I still pray," she exclaimed, "that death spared her!"

Far away across the flat fields a dog barked, a whistle sounded.
